abstract In recent years palm oil due to its versatile usages in the food and mechanic industry experienced a rapidly growing demand on the world market Market researchers predict an even increasing importance of the already leading oil seed crop because of its role as a feedstock for biofuel Despite its unexcelled yield per unit of cultivated area oil palm Elaeis guineensis is among the most controversially discussed agricultural products There is a confusingly high number of stakeholders involved and strong lobbying from both proponents and opponents of palm oil make any impartial balancing of the potential uses and or destructiveness a difficult task Beyond dispute is the fact that with the growing demand ecologically justifiable acreage becomes increasingly scarce which enhances the pressure for land conversion Unfortunately the climatic tolerance limits of E guineensis restrict its successful cultivation to tropical realms eco sensitive areas with the highest biodiversity levels Scientists watch with despair how mono cultures are spreading at an ever increasing pace often replacing food crops and subsistence farming plots nourishing local people and even more often at the expense of the world's few virgin forests remnants Various policies and strategies on an international REDD CDM RSPO and national national laws level have been pronounced and partially implemented to ensure a more sustainable palm oil production Currently however political incapacity corruption loopholes and beguilements paralyze the intentions to capitalize the factual benefits of palm oil as a productive feedstock for renewable energy and as an economy and welfare booster for less developed areas Under present conditions an increased productivity of palm oil is overpaid for dearly by the local people and the international community with widespread deforestation resulting GHG Green House Gas emissions an incredible loss of biodiversity and ecological integrity In short palm oil has great potential to help meet the growing energy demand in a more sustainable way but it is a long way to go and currently the impacts crucially outweigh the benefits

Leipziger, 1988 Korea's remarkable industrial progress has been virtually unparalleled in the developing world. Through painstaking effort and prudent management the economy has been transformed from that of a poor agricultural society to a major economic power in Asia. In the process standards of living have increased dramatically however with democratization have come even higher economic expectations. Korea now stands poised to shortly join the ranks of the developed nations on the basis of its export success but it must also meet the new demands of its people. This volume cuts across a broad spectrum of issues and highlights some of the remaining challenges to Korea's development. By including scholars from Korea as well U.S. academics and experts who deal directly with Korean economic policy the book brings to bear a judicious blend of views on the hurdles to be overcome by Korean policy makers in this final and arguably most difficult step in Korea's transition to maturity. Bradstreet's Weekly, 1896 Economic Integration and Trade Liberalization in Southern Africa Merle Holden, 1996 World Bank Discussion Paper No 342 Examines South Africa's dominant trading position in the Southern African region and asks whether the country should participate in any of the existing regional trade groups and establish preferential trading arrangements within those various groups. The study concludes that preferential trading arrangements are no substitute for multilateral trade liberalization when the preferences are given to a more dominant economy.
