

These ideas are not new. In 1968, the National Commission on Civil Rights in Education (NCCRE) issued a report that recommended that the federal government should provide financial support to the states for the development of comprehensive school improvement programs. The report also recommended that the federal government should provide technical assistance to the states and local school districts in the development and implementation of these programs. The report was titled "A National Plan for School Improvement" and it was presented to the U.S. Congress. The report was well received and it led to the passage of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) in 1965. The ESEA provided financial support to the states for the development of comprehensive school improvement programs. The ESEA also provided technical assistance to the states and local school districts in the development and implementation of these programs. The ESEA was a major step forward in the development of comprehensive school improvement programs in the United States.

From a personal and professional point of view, I am very grateful to the University of Cambridge for the award of a Research Studentship, which has enabled me to complete this work.
