Reports of Cases Heard and Determined in the Supreme Court of the State of New York Marcus Tullius Hun, 1894      Disability Insurance Rejection Rates and the Labor Supply of Older Workers Jonathan Gruber, Jeffrey D. Kubik, 1994 Disability Insurance DI which provides income support to disabled workers has been criticized for inducing a large fall in the labor force participation rate of older workers We study the effects of one policy response designed to address this moral hazard problem raising the rate at which DI claims are denied Initial DI applications are decided at the state level and in response to a funding crisis for the DI program in the late 1970s the states raised their rejection rates for first time applicants by 30% on average The extent of this rise however varied substantially across states We use this variation to estimate a significant reduction in labor force non participation among older workers in response to denial rate rises A 10% increase in denial rates led to a 2.7% fall in non participation among 45-64 year old males between 1992 and 2003 of this effect is a true reduction in labor force leaving with the remainder accounted for by the return to work of denied applicants We find some support for the notion that increases in denial rates effectively target their incentive effects to more able individuals the fall in labor force non participation was much stronger among more able workers according to an anthropometric measure of disability New York Journal of Homœopathy ,1884 Walford's Guide to
