

REFERENCES AND NOTES

Because of the importance of the first impression and the importance of the reading, the teacher must make every effort to make the connection with that impression and the reading. This example of a teacher who did not do this is interesting. Although the teacher planned the opportunity, she did not fully understand the importance of the connection. She believed her students would not fully understand her lesson and gave them a problem that involved many parts. Instead of connecting these separate parts, the teacher began by giving her students the problem and then asked them to discuss it. This failing failed the teacher to connect the reading and the lesson, and the teacher did not fully understand the importance of the connection. This failing failed the teacher to connect the reading and the lesson, and the teacher did not fully understand the importance of the connection.
