

The Skeletal System

Generally described as one part, the skeletal system of the axial skeleton and the appendicular skeleton.

The Axial Skeleton

The axial skeleton supports the skull, vertebral column, rib cage, and sternum. The skull forms a protective shell for the brain and sensory organs, such as the lower part of the skull giving them to the face. The base of the skull joins with the first vertebra of the spine, the atlas, the articulation of the two bones enabling opening to the skull, accommodating the eyes, nose, ears, and mouth. The bones of the skull have spongy parts, called sinuses, which interlock and are often firmly held together with fibrous connective tissue.

The vertebral column (spine) is a column of bones, called vertebrae, each separated by a cushioning pad of fibrocartilage called the intervertebral disk. While individuals can 30 vertebrae be extremely limited movement, collectively the vertebral column is highly mobile and, when required, the spine becomes a rigid unit, held firm by the back muscles, as the anterior arch is lifting can be performed.

The ribs of the thoracic cage join with the vertebrae at the back and enclose the heart and lungs. The first seven ribs, the true ribs, run to the front to the sternum. The next three ribs, the false ribs, run to one another and then attach to the last rib. The remaining one rib, the floating rib, is not attached to the front.

The Appendicular Skeleton

The appendicular skeleton includes the limb bones of the arms and legs, and the girdles that connect them to the axial skeleton, the shoulder girdle and the pelvic girdle. The bones of the arm (humerus, radius, and ulna) and the leg (femur, tibia, and fibula) are all long bones.

With a similar structure, the bones of the hand and foot comprise 14 bones in the fingers and toes, the wrist has 8 bones, the ankle has 7, and there are 5 bones in both the pelvis of the hand and the tibia of the foot.

Due to the head bearing requirements placed on the lower teeth, the pelvic girdle is joined to the axial skeleton at the sacroiliac joint, a relatively rigid joint, whereas the connection of the shoulder girdle to the axial skeleton, being loosely connected to the 12th rib by muscle, is only stabilizing connection provided by the collar bone.
