

Waking/Ice records a father's spirals of emotions as he tries to understand, cope with, and weather his son's addiction, attempts at recovery, and later self-destruction. It covers mainly a fifteen-month period beginning with the time the father first learned of his son's problem, through the period when the latter came to live with him, until the son's self-inflicted death a few days before his twenty-third birthday.

In a sequence of chiseled poems addressed mostly to his son, the poet who thought he would show the collection to his son years after the latter's recovery and share a good laugh with him for what they went through memorializes a wide range of complex emotions dealing with fatherhood, sonship, and loss, and uses a variety of poetic styles to chart the gamut of his experience. Here is language brought as woundingly close to real life and silence.
