The Ocean Laboratory Athelstan Spilhaus, 2013 Critical Infrastructure for Ocean Research and Societal Needs in 2030 National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Ocean Studies Board, Committee on an Ocean Infrastructure Strategy for U.S. Ocean Research in 2030, 2011-07-24

The United States has jurisdiction over 3.4 million square miles of ocean in its exclusive economic zone a size exceeding the combined land area of the 50 states. This expansive marine area represents a prime national domain for activities such as maritime transportation, national security, energy, and mineral extraction, fisheries, and aquaculture, and tourism and recreation. However, it also carries with it the threat of damaging outbreaks of waterborne pathogens. The 2010 Gulf of Mexico Deepwater Horizon oil spill and the 2011 Japanese earthquake and tsunami are vivid reminders that ocean activities and processes have direct human implications. Both nationally and worldwide, understanding of the ocean system is still incomplete, and ocean research infrastructure is needed to support both fundamental research and societal priorities. Given current struggles to maintain, operate, and upgrade major infrastructure elements while maintaining a robust research portfolio, a strategic plan is needed for future investments to ensure that new facilities provide the greatest value, least redundancy, and highest efficiency in terms of operation and flexibility to incorporate new technological advances.

Critical Infrastructure for Ocean Research and Societal Needs in 2030 identifies major research questions anticipated to be at the forefront of ocean science in 2030 based on national and international assessments, input from the worldwide scientific community, and ongoing research planning activities. This report defines categories of infrastructure that should be included in planning for the nation's ocean research infrastructure of 2030 and that will be required to answer the major research questions of the future. Critical Infrastructure for Ocean Research and Societal Needs in 2030 provides advice on the criteria and processes that could be used to set priorities for the development of new ocean infrastructure or replacement of existing facilities. In addition, this report recommends ways in which the federal agencies can maximize the value of investments in ocean infrastructure.

A Review of the Ocean Research Priorities Plan and Implementation Strategy National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Ocean Studies Board, Committee to Review the Joint Subcommittee on Ocean Science and Technology's Research Priorities Plan, 2007-10-25

Ocean research offers countless benefits, from improving fisheries management to discovering new drugs to enabling early detection of tsunamis and hurricanes. At the request of the Joint Subcommittee on Ocean Science and Technology, JSOST, the National Research Council convened a committee to review the draft and final versions of the Ocean Research Priorities Plan and Implementation Strategy described in Charting the Course for Ocean Science in the United States: Research Priorities for the Next Decade, which represents the first coordinated national ocean research planning effort involving all federal agencies that support ocean science. The plan presents an ambitious vision for ocean research that will be of great benefit to the ocean sciences community and the nation. This book contains both sets of findings: i.e., the committee s review of the JSOST s draft plan A Review of the Draft Ocean Research Priorities Plan Charting the Course for Ocean Science in the United States and the review of the final plan This book recommends that JSOST employ a variety of outreach mechanisms to continue to engage nonfederal partners in ocean research planning efforts such as establishing external committees to provide scientific and technical advice and to review progress on implementation of the research plan The Ocean Laboratory Antony Adler,2014 In framing the history of field sciences most historians emphasize terrestrial sites rather than marine ones But to ignore marine spaces is to omit an extensive geography to which the abstract notion of the field has also been applied While the importance of laboratories as a space for scientific work has been well established by historians and though there has been a growing body of recent scholarship on the history of field science the link between laboratories ships museums and the development of oceanography as a field science has yet to be fully explored Tracing this history sets the history of oceanography within the larger history of science in the field and thereby offers to the history of science a contribution which bridges two subfields the history of the development of laboratory and field sciences and the history of the exploration of the marine environment A central theme of this project is the shifting conception of the research vessel over the period from ca 1830 to present as it underwent a change from the ship as instrument to the ship as laboratory and finally in its most recent incarnation to the ship as invisible technician operating within an ocean transformed into credible scientific space Beginning with a description of expeditionary science at the turn of the nineteenth century this dissertation charts a gradual re centering of spaces of scientific analysis from the metropole to the field via the marine station and finally the research vessel In doing so it examines the social political and cultural context in which these shifts took place and reveals an emerging scientific and political discourse equating international cooperation and progress in marine science These were both goals of Prince Albert 1st of Monaco his scientific program and the oceanographic institutions he founded helped permanently link these dual agendas Thus this study sheds light on the social and cultural processes involved in the emergence of global sciences framed in terms of large scale systems both physical and political Furthermore by tracing the development of oceans as scientific spaces this work demonstrates how the idea of a Pacific World with roots in nineteenth century expeditionary science contributed to the self conscious geopolitical construction of this concept in the interwar period Public proclamations about the Pacific World along with the development of museum exhibits focused on marine science and interpreting the results of oceanographic expeditions demonstrate the ways in which popular culture and politics interacted with the cultures of marine science Hence in the twentieth century world s fairgrounds on the west coast of the United States became an important venue for popularizing large scale science and presenting appeals for scientific internationalism in the Pacific Marine Station for Scientific Research Granton, Edinburgh Joseph Thomas Cunningham,1884 Science John Michels (Journalist),1888 Vols for 1911 13 contain the Proceedings of the Helminothological Society of Washington ISSN 0018 0120 1st 15th meeting The Quality of NOAA's

Embracing the Beat of Appearance: An Emotional Symphony within The Ocean Laboratory

In some sort of consumed by screens and the ceaseless chatter of immediate conversation, the melodic beauty and emotional symphony developed by the prepared term frequently fade into the background, eclipsed by the constant sound and disturbances that permeate our lives. Nevertheless, set within the pages of The Ocean Laboratory a marvelous literary treasure full of natural feelings, lies an immersive symphony waiting to be embraced. Crafted by an elegant musician of language, this fascinating masterpiece conducts readers on an emotional trip, skillfully unraveling the concealed melodies and profound influence resonating within each carefully crafted phrase. Within the depths with this moving analysis, we shall discover the book is main harmonies, analyze their enthralling writing fashion, and submit ourselves to the profound resonance that echoes in the depths of readers souls.
