Spiders Inside And Out:

American Spiders and Their Spinning Work: Snares and nests Henry Christopher McCook, 1889 American Spiders and Their Spinning-work Henry Christopher McCook (D.D.), 1889 House Spiders - Worldwide Wolfgang Nentwig, Jutta Ansorg, Paula E. Cushing, Yvonne Kranz-Baltensperger, Christian Kropf, 2025-01-03 To avoid any misunderstandings this book is not about spiders as pets but about those spiders that live in our houses and apartments as lodgers Mostly ignored and sometimes wrongly feared there is hardly a building in the world that does not harbour some species of spider What is fascinating is that we always find the same species These spiders must have special adaptations because the humidity in our homes is far too low they are too clean and the food supply is usually scarce However those spiders that have made the leap into our four walls are rewarded with a worldwide right to stay This in turn is due to people's eagerness to trade and migrate worldwide Humans tirelessly transport their belongings and an endless stream of goods around the world in sacks parcels and containers And our domestic spiders as stowaways travel just as tirelessly and unrecognized It is therefore possible to present domestic spiders found throughout the world in a single book as they are essentially the same everywhere The 50 or so most important species and species groups are presented here in a generally understandable way with a detailed profile photos and distribution maps The authors of this book are experts who work at museums universities and in administration in Europe and North America They are not only recognized scientists but have also been avowed spider fans for decades

Inside-out Robert W. Blake, J. Adam Frederick, 2010 American Spiders and Their Spinningwork Henry Christopher McCook, 1889 Birds in Our Lives United States. Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife, 1966 The Dwellers in Our Gardens, Their Lives and Works Sara Wood, 1875 Attention, predictions and expectations, and their violation: attentional control in the human brain Simone Vossel, Joy J. Geng, Karl J. Friston, 2015-05-20 In the burdened scenes of everyday life our brains must select from among many competing inputs for perceptual synthesis so that only the most relevant receive full attention and irrelevant distracting information is suppressed At the same time we must remain responsive to salient events outside our current focus of attention and balancing these two processing modes is a fundamental task our brain constantly needs to solve Both the physical saliency of a stimulus as well as top down predictions about imminent sensations crucially influence attentional selection and consequently the response to unexpected events Research over recent decades has identified two separate brain networks involved in predictive top down control and reorientation to unattended events or oddball stimuli the dorsal and ventral fronto parietal attention systems of the human brain Moreover specific electrophysiological brain responses are known to characterize attentional orienting as well as the processing of deviant stimuli However many key questions are outstanding What are the exact functional differences between these cortical attention systems How are they lateralised in the two hemispheres How do top down and bottom up signals interact to enable flexible attentional control How does structural damage to one system affect the functionality of the other in brain damaged patients Are there sensory specific and supra modal attentional systems in the brain In addition to these questions it is now accepted that brain responses are not only affected by the saliency of external stimuli but also by our expectations about sensory inputs How these two influences are balanced and how predictions are formed in cortical networks or generated on the basis of experience dependent learning are intriguing issues In this Research Topic we aim to collect innovative contributions that shed further light on the cortical mechanisms of attentional control in the human brain In particular we would like to encourage submissions that investigate the behavioural correlates functional anatomy or electrophysiological markers of attentional selection and reorientation Special emphasis will be given to studies investigating the context sensitivity of these attentional processes in relation to prior expectations trial history contextual cues or physical saliency We would like to encourage submissions employing different research methods psychophysical recordings neuroimaging techniques such as fMRI MEG EEG or ECoG as well as neurostimulation methods such as TMS or tDCS in healthy volunteers or neurological patients Computational models and animal studies are also welcome Finally we also welcome submission of meta analyses and reviews articles that provide new insights into or conclusions about recent work in the field
