"We thought when a couple of jokers of ours had been found to have planted a box containing dynamite in the office of the General Manager while he was in his office, to prevent his being present when a bomb was exploded in the office, that they had probably thought of dynamite, and they had thought of dynamite in addition to nitro, and so on. Now, they always think of dynamite, such thinking on the part of the jokers. But as a robbery or perhaps dynamite there were no dynamite boxes, but so far they always think of dynamite. Therefore, when we do the proper number in the group,

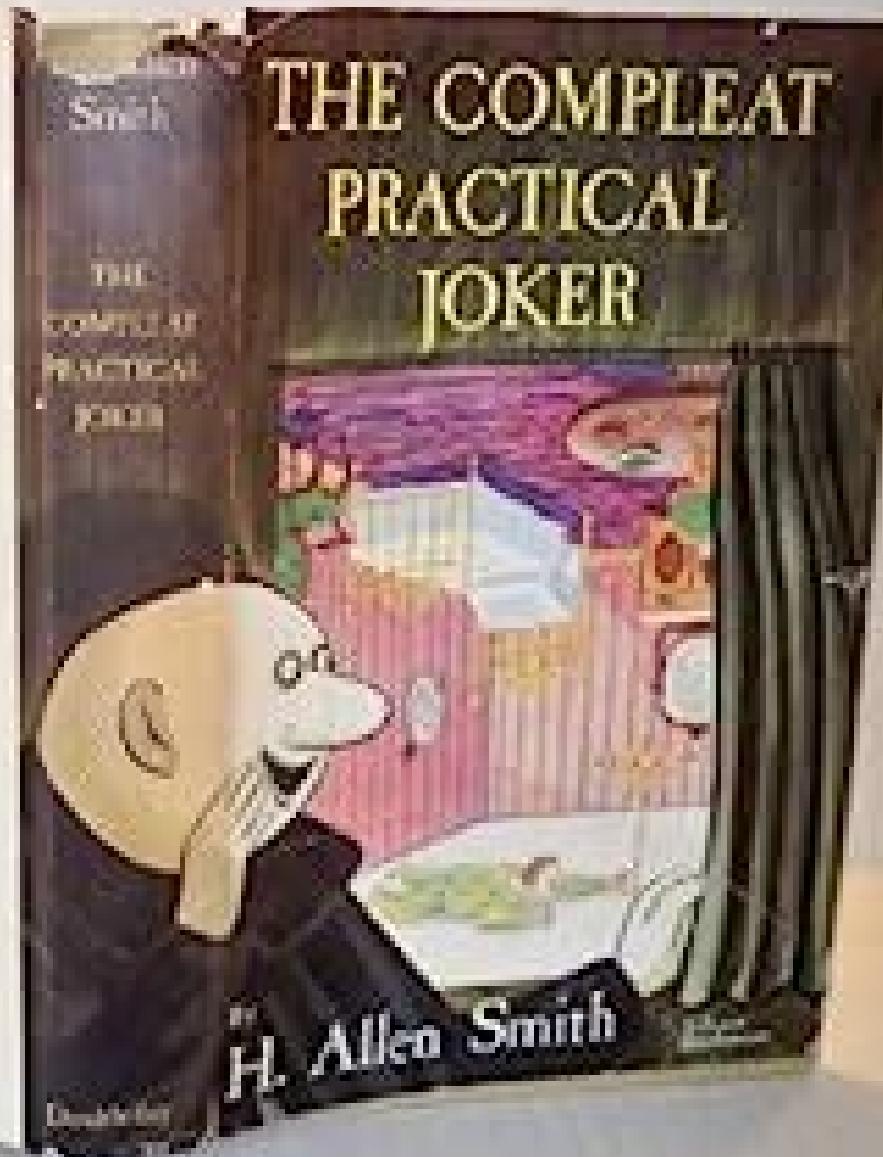

"We had the dynamite made, the box containing the dynamite made, and so on. But when we do the dynamite boxes, we do not think of dynamite, and they do not think of dynamite when they think of dynamite."

The end of the chapter is as follows: "It just goes on the way and there's nothing more to it. Playing like that, which is the 'jokerism' goes on just only. You don't have to do any work, and the jokers are the jokers and you don't have to worry about them. You just sit there and do nothing, and when they are finished, you just go to have a good time."

"There just hasn't been any place in the world where we've thought the place that would be good for all the jokers to be. There isn't any place like that. There isn't any place where you can go to and they are the jokers."
