Tradition Today Robert Adam, Matthew Hardy, 2008 In January 2002 after a two year gestation period the International Network for Traditional Buildings Architecture and Urbanism INTBAU was launched To celebrate the launch a conference was held to debate the place of tradition in modern society While INTBAU was specifically concerned with building and urbanism if tradition was indeed relevant then it must have a place throughout society The conference forms the basis of this book It is an important feature of traditions that they adapt and change So while change accelerates so should the adaptation of traditions If we rely on tradition for the transmission of culture then the adaptation of traditions is a matter of importance to all of us If change occurs without the transmission of culture then culture itself dies culture cannot be created anew every day The evolutionary nature of tradition is something often ignored by supporters and opponents alike It is important that history that which measures our distance from the past is not confused with tradition the past living through us The papers presented in this book discuss these points and many others are a fascinating miscellany With contributions ranging from the practical to the academic these papers can leave no doubt about the continued role and significance of tradition the passion of those who understand its relevance and the dangers inherent in its denial
