Statistical Movement In Early Victorian:

The Statistical Movement in Early Victorian Britain Michael J. Cullen, 1975 Examines the main features of the statistical movement in early Victorian Britain especially in the 1830s and 1840s until its demise in 1852 in order to find out how it organized itself to assess its achievements and to discover a distinctive philosophy if it had one Most of the social statisticians of the time are included here and their activities are introduced by a survey of British social statisticians from 1660 to 1830 The remainder of the book is divided into two parts government departments and social statistics 1832 1852 the statistical societies of London Manchester and of other provincial towns such as Glasgow Bristol Belfast and Leeds The Statistical Movement in Early Victorian Britain: the Foundation of Empirical Social Research M. J. Cullen, 1975

The Rise of Statistical Thinking, 1820-1900 Theodore M. Porter, 1986 Not since the invention of the calculus if ever has a new field of mathematics found such extensive application as statistics in the twentieth century This book presents thoroughly and lucidly the diverse nineteenth century origins of the mathematical tool of our day Emphasizing the debt of science to nonspecialist intellectuals Theodore Porter describes in detail the nineteenth century background that produced the burst of modern statistical innovation of the early 1900s He shows that the natural and social sciences were surprisingly interdependent Statistics arose as a study of society the science of the statistician and the pioneering statistical physicists and biologists Maxwell Boltzmann and Galton each introduced statistical models by pointing to analogies between his discipline and social science The author also examines significant philosophical issues raised by the development of statistics in the 1800s For a time the evident success of statistical social science was held to be inconsistent with human free will Gradually a consensus was developed that the need for statistical methods arose from the diversity of phenomena which precluded explanation in detail Debates concerning the nature of statistical knowledge were central to the new indeterminism that began to emerge at the end of the century from back cover Disciplining Statistics Libby Schweber, 2006-11-28

Disciplining Statistics contrasts the different ways that statistical knowledge was developed and used in England and France during the nineteenth century When Information Came of Age Daniel R. Headrick, 2000-12-28 Although the Information Age is often described as a new era a cultural leap springing directly from the invention of modern computers it is simply the latest step in a long cultural process Its conceptual roots stretch back to the profound changes that occurred during the Age of Reason and Revolution When Information Came of Age argues that the key to the present era lies in understanding the systems developed in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries to gather store transform display and communicate information The book provides a concise and readable survey of the many conceptual developments between 1700 and 1850 and draws connections to leading technologies of today It documents three breakthroughs in information systems that date to the period the classification and nomenclature of Linnaeus the chemical system devised by Lavoisier and the metric system It shows how eighteenth century political arithmeticians and demographers pioneered statistics and graphs as a means for presenting data succinctly and visually It describes the transformation of cartography from art to science as it incorporated new methods for determining longitude at sea and new data on the measure the arc of the meridian on land Finally it looks at the early steps in codifying and transmitting information including the development of dictionaries the invention of semaphore telegraphs and naval flag signaling and the conceptual changes in the use and purpose of postal services When Information Came of Age shows that like the roots of democracy and industrialization the foundations of the Information Age were built in the eighteenth and early nineteenth century

States and Statistics in the Nineteenth Century Nico Randeraad, 2010-09-15 The book is a truly European history of statistics in the nineteenth century Nico Randeraad follows nine international conferences organised by statisticians in different European countries focusing on the tensions between the neutral aspirations of science and national interests

A History of Mathematical Statistics from 1750 to 1930 Anders Hald, 1998-04-22 The long awaited second volume of Anders Hald s history of the development of mathematical statistics Anders Hald s A History of Probability and Statistics and Their Applications before 1750 is already considered a classic by many mathematicians and historians This new volume picks up where its predecessor left off describing the contemporaneous development and interaction of four topics direct probability theory and sampling distributions inverse probability by Bayes and Laplace the method of least squares and the central limit theorem and selected topics in estimation theory after 1830 In this rich and detailed work Hald carefully traces the history of parametric statistical inference the development of the corresponding mathematical methods and some typical applications Not surprisingly the ideas concepts methods and results of Laplace Gauss and Fisher dominate his account In particular Hald analyzes the work and interactions of Laplace and Gauss and describes their contributions to modern theory Hald also offers a great deal of new material on the history of the period and enhances our understanding of both the controversies and continuities that developed between the different schools To enable readers to compare the contributions of various historical figures Professor Hald has rewritten the original papers in a uniform modern terminology and notation while leaving the ideas unchanged Statisticians probabilists actuaries mathematicians historians of science and advanced students will find absorbing reading in the author s insightful description of important problems and how they gradually moved toward solution
