Managing Knowledge at the Canadian Forest Service Albert J. Simard, Canadian Forest Service. Science Branch, 2000 This document provides a foundation on which a knowledge infrastructure can be built for the Canadian Forest Service and an initiative put forward. The first part describes the technological, social, forestry and organizational context that surrounds knowledge management at the Service. The concepts of the information society and knowledge economy are interpreted according to how they influence knowledge management at the institutional level. This is followed by an examination of the nature and characteristics of forestry knowledge and an overview of the Service's organizational structure within which the knowledge infrastructure will be developed. The second part develops a model of knowledge management and proposes a three dimensional framework for a Canadian Forest Service knowledge infrastructure. The final part addresses the establishment of a Canadian Forest Service knowledge initiative and presents an overview discussion for the development of a strategic plan.

This is Paradise Michael Andrew Den Otter, Thomas Mark Beckley, Atlantic Forestry Centre, 2002 This report examines both subjective and objective social indicators of community sustainability in the Western Newfoundland Model Forest with a specific focus on the communities of Corner Brook Pasadena Lark Harbour and Rocky Harbour as these are representative of the region's community types. The objective measures are in the form of Canadian Census data and the subjective measures come from personal interviews with community residents. Six key indicators are used to assess community sustainability: population, employment, income, human capital, poverty, and real estate. The findings are synthesized in discussions of resource dependence, the differences in what the indicators show for each of the communities, and the contrasts between what the subjective and objective indicators show.

The North American Mosaic Commission for Environmental Cooperation (Montréal, Québec). Secretariat, 2001. The North American Mosaic has four overarching features. First, it is to the extent feasible based on comparable information on the status and trends of major indicators of the state of the environment in Canada, Mexico, and the United States. Second, the report confirms that these three countries together make up an incredibly complex, dynamic, and interconnected ecosystem in which humans play a dominant and decisive role. Third, the report raises important and sometimes disquieting questions concerning the sustainability of some current trends. Finally, the report is a reminder that our economic, social, and physical well-being are utterly dependent on the life-sustaining services provided by nature. This report emphasizes the importance of developing mutually compatible economic, social, and environmental goals and policies across the three-country region.
