The Political Elite and Special Interests Rachel Bozek,2017-07-15 There is a growing sense that government is no longer of the people by the people and for the people Many believe that society is manipulated by a handful of political elites and special interests But why does each party feel that it is the elites and special interests of the other party who are in control of things Does one person one vote still hold sway Is this still a citizen democracy or has it evolved into an oligarchy Whose voice and vote really count These and other questions and debates concerning power influence and who wields it are at the center of this fascinating collection of articles drawn from across the political spectrum

When Do Special Interests Run Rampant? Philip Keefer,2001 Government responses to banking crises are less likely to favor special interest groups when elections are near voters are better informed about the costs of inefficient government decisions and governments have multiple veto players Keefer investigates the political determinants of government decisions that benefit special interest groups especially government decisions to deal with banking crises He finds that the better informed the voters the more proximate elections and the larger the number of political veto players conditional on the costs to voters of relevant policy decisions the smaller the government's fiscal transfers are to the financial sector and the less likely the government is to exercise forbearance in dealing with insolvent financial institutions
