Social Amnesia:

Social Amnesia Russell Jacoby, 2018-04-27 Russell Jacoby defines social amnesia as society's repression of remembrance of its own past. In this book Jacoby excavates the critical and historical concepts that have fallen prey to the dynamic of a society that strips them both of their historical and critical content. Social Amnesia is an effort to remember what is perpetually lost under the pressure of society. It is simultaneously a critique of present practices and theories in psychology. Jacoby's new self-evaluation has the same sharp edge as the book itself, offering special insights into the evolution of psychological theory during the past two decades. In his probing self-critical new introduction, Jacoby maintains that any serious appraisal of psychology or sociology or any discipline must seek to separate the political from the theoretical. He discusses how in the years since Social Amnesia was first published, society has oscillated from extreme subjectivism to extreme objectivism, which feed off each other and constitute two forms of social amnesia: a forgetting of the past and a pseudo historical consciousness. Social Amnesia contains a forceful argument for thinking against the grain, an endeavor that remains as urgent as ever. It is an important work for sociologists, psychologists and psychoanalysts.

Social Amnesia and the Eclipse of History in New Zealand School Syllabi 1947-2002 David Glowsky, 2004-01-04 Seminar paper from the year 2002 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Culture and Applied Geography grade 1 3 A Victoria University of Wellington Robert Stout Research Centre course MNZS 511 Contemporary New Zealand language English abstract. This essay analyses the content of the New Zealand Social Studies and History syllabi of the past 55 years. It concentrates on the one hand on content that refers to race relations in the country to see what information was included or excluded to draw a certain picture of race relations; on the other hand, it looks at how New Zealand interprets its links to other countries to find out where it places itself culturally and politically in the world. It looks for patterns within the curriculum content that indicate certain ideological directions at the time the curricula were written and for changes in these patterns over time. The underlying assumption here is that any school curriculum, regardless of its composition, is invariably a political instrument. Openshaw and Archer have shown that even Social Studies, which have been regarded as unbiased and value free, are as indoctrinated as history syllabi of the early 20th century. The main objective of Social Studies since its introduction in 1947 has not been to teach history. With little changes in formulation, its aims have been to prepare children for life in New Zealand society to introduce them to democratic institutions and make them eligible citizens. History as such plays a minor part in this. In 1986 Ann Low Beer, a visiting British historian, reported that the majority of Social Studies teachers had no training in history and historical material like primary resources hardly existed. The framework of Social Studies in the 1980s, like today, was sociological, based on general conceptions of human nature and interaction. Low Beer's survey of teachers in 15 Wellington Junior schools asked whether students at the end of Form 4, that is at the end of the compulsory Social Studies course, had an overall view of New Zealand human history. The responses made clear that Social Studies is about the present.

and a picture of New Zealand sic past is not the point of the course According to the teachers after eight years of Social Studies the pupils had no idea they knew not even the basics like the names of Prime Ministers this century and it was best to assume total ignorance of history in all pupils entering Form V 5 Pupils thought similar about this issue Keen found in 1977 that only 25% of older pupils felt that Social Studies had given them any insight into history Social Amnesia
