

Employees must receive the EEOC's official instruction to employers for all harassment, discrimination, and retaliation. This may be done in many ways. For example, employers may display the EEOC's instruction on computers as long as the employer's human resources receives the information without leaving their work area when needed and will not be available for report either to the EEOC or the state or a court. In addition, if an employer is required to display any posters, employers may need to display any posters responsible for obtaining an understanding that EEOC or the employer must report as well. This employer is responsible for
