Buggs, 2017-12-05 On his last day as a resident in psychiatry Dr Jorch Karson decided to entertain his therapy group with a lighthearted game of lifeboat The object is to observe the process by which the members discern who in the group would be expendable if only a specified number could survive Dr Vanderwillt an elderly male patient is jokingly rebuffed by some of the younger group members who imply that because of his age he should not object to being dumped overboard In retaliation the incensed Dr Vanderwillt proclaims that there is one thing far worse than getting old not having the choice The story Lifeboat is about a young naive doctor who with the encouragement of a very charming program coordinator becomes unwittingly involved in a program called GRFL or Gentle Relief from Life The program is comparable to the end of life as planned parenthood is to the beginning Despite being assured that the program was only in the profile development phase Dr Karson soon has reason to suspect that some Patients were turning up as victims of tragic accidents Like a gemologist who appraises the quality of precious stones Dr Karson considered himself an expert in appraising the quality of his fellowman's reality But soon he began to question the quality of his own reality With trepidation Dr Karson finally admits that he is in a situation where the guardrail between right and wrong is absent He has accepted a job that courted his expertise but only needs and wants his credentials New Catholic
