

The Life You Save May Be Your Own

by Flannery O'Connor

The old woman and her daughter were sitting on their porch when Mr. Shiflet came up their road for the first time. The old woman sat to the edge of her chair and leaned forward, shading her eyes from the glaring sun with her hand. The daughter could not see far in front of her and continued to play with her fingers. Although the old woman lived in this desolate spot with only her daughter and she had never seen Mr. Shiflet before, she could tell, even from a distance, that he was a tramp and no one to be afraid of. His left over sleeve was folded up to show there was only half an arm in it and his gaunt figure leaned slightly to the side as if the bones were pulling him. He had on a black overcoat and a brown felt hat that was turned up in the front and down in the back and he carried a tin roof box by a handle. He came on, at an amble, up her road, his face turned toward the sun which appeared to be balancing itself on the peak of a small mountain.

The old woman didn't change her position until he was almost into her yard, then she rose with one hand fared on her hip. The daughter, a large girl in a short blue organdy dress, saw him all at once and jumped up and began to tramp and peep and make excited speechless sounds.

Mr. Shiflet stopped just inside the yard and set his box on the ground and ripped his hat at her as if she were one in the line of fire, then he turned toward the old woman and swung the hat all the way off. He had long black slick hair that hung flat from a part in the middle to beyond the tips of his ears on either side. His face descended in forehead for more than half its length and ended suddenly with his eyebrows just balanced over a jutting underlip jaw. He seemed to be a young man but he had a look of composed dissatisfaction as if he understood life thoroughly.

"Good evening," the old woman said. She was above the size of a collar fence post and she had a man's gray hair pulled down low over her head.

The tramp stood looking at her and didn't answer. He turned his back and faced the sun. He swung both his whole and his shirt arm up slowly as they indicated an expanse of sky and his figure formed a crooked cross. The old woman watched him with her arms folded across her chest as if she were the owner of the sun, and the daughter watched, her head thrown forward and her far helpless hands hanging to the wrists. She had long pink-gold hair and eyes as blue as a peacock's neck.

He held the pose for almost fifty seconds and then he picked up his box and came on to the porch and dropped down on the bottom step. "Lady," he said in a firm nasal voice. "I'd give a fortune to live where I could see one a sun do that every evening."

"Does it every evening," the old woman said and sat back down. The daughter sat down too and watched him with a cautious shy look as if he were a bird that had come up very close. He leaned to one side, rooting in his pants pocket, and in a second he brought out a package of chewing gum and offered her a piece. She took it and unwrapped it and began to chew without taking her eyes off him. He offered the old woman a piece but she only raised her upper lip to indicate she had no teeth.

Mr. Shiflet's pale sharp glance had dazedly passed over everything in the yard—the pump near the corner of the house and the big fig tree that three or four chickens were preparing to roost in—and had moved to a shed where he saw the square rounded back of an automobile. "You ladies drive?" he asked.

"That car ain't run in fifteen years," the old woman said. "The day my husband died, it quit running."

"Nothing is like it used to be, lady," he said. "The world is almost gone."

"That's right," the old woman said. "You from around here?"

"Name Tom T. Shiflet," he murmured, looking at the stars.

"I'm pleased to meet you," the old woman said. "Name Lucynell Craver and daughter Lucynell Craver. What you doing around here, Mr. Shiflet?"

He judged the car to be about a 1928 or '29 Ford. "Lady," he said, and turned and gave her his full attention. "I want to tell you something. There's one of these doctors in Atlanta that's taken a knife and cut out the human heart—the human heart," he repeated, leaning forward, "out of a man's chest and held it in his hand," and he held his hand out, palm up, as if it were slightly weighted with the human heart, "and studied it like it was a day-old chicken, and lady," he said, allowing a long significant pause in which his head slid forward and his day-colored eyes brightened. "He don't know no more about it than you or me."

"That's right," the old woman said.

"Why, if he was to take that knife and cut into every corner of it, he still wouldn't know no more than you or me. What you want to hear?"

"Nothing," the old woman said wisely. "What you come from, Mr. Shiflet?"

He didn't answer. He reached into his pocket and brought out a sack of tobacco and a package of cigarettes and rolled himself a cigarette, expertly with one hand, and attached it in a hanging position to his upper lip. Then he took a box of wooden matches from his pocket and struck one on his shoe. He held the burning match as if he were studying the mystery of flame while it crackled dangerously toward his skin. The daughter began to make loud noises and to point to his hand and shake her finger at him, but when the flame was just before reaching him, he leaned down with his hand cupped over it as if he were going to set fire to his nose and fix the cigarette.

He flipped away the dead match and blew a stream of gray into the evening. A dry look came over his face. "Lady," he said, "nowadays, people'll do anything anyway. I can tell you my name is Tom T. Shiflet and I come from Tennessee, Tennessee, but you never have seen me before; how you know I ain't lying? How you know my name ain't Aaron Sparks, lady, and I come from Singletown, Georgia, or how you know it's not George Speeds and I come from Lucy, Alabama, or how you know I ain't Thompson Bright from Foolsville, Mississippi?"

"I don't know nothing about you," the old woman murmured, looked.

"Lady," he said, "people don't care how they lie. Maybe the best I can tell you is, I'm a man, but listen lady," he said and paused and made his voice more serious still, "what is a man?"

The old woman began to gum a seed. "What you carry

The Life You Save Introduction

In this digital age, the convenience of accessing information at our fingertips has become a necessity. Whether its research papers, eBooks, or user manuals, PDF files have become the preferred format for sharing and reading documents. However, the cost associated with purchasing PDF files can sometimes be a barrier for many individuals and organizations. Thankfully, there are numerous websites and platforms that allow users to download free PDF files legally. In this article, we will explore some of the best platforms to download free PDFs. One of the most popular platforms to download free PDF files is Project Gutenberg. This online library offers over 60,000 free eBooks that are in the public domain. From classic literature to historical documents, Project Gutenberg provides a wide range of PDF files that can be downloaded and enjoyed on various devices. The website is user-friendly and allows users to search for specific titles or browse through different categories. Another reliable platform for downloading The Life You Save free PDF files is Open Library. With its vast collection of over 1 million eBooks, Open Library has something for every reader. The website offers a seamless experience by providing options to borrow or download PDF files. Users simply need to create a free account to access this treasure trove of knowledge. Open Library also allows users to contribute by uploading and sharing their own PDF files, making it a collaborative platform for book enthusiasts. For those interested in academic resources, there are websites dedicated to providing free PDFs of research papers and scientific articles. One such website is Academia.edu, which allows researchers and scholars to share their work with a global audience. Users can download PDF files of research papers, theses, and dissertations covering a wide range of subjects. Academia.edu also provides a platform for discussions and networking within the academic community. When it comes to downloading The Life You Save free PDF files of magazines, brochures, and catalogs, Issuu is a popular choice. This digital publishing platform hosts a vast collection of publications from around the world. Users can search for specific titles or explore various categories and genres. Issuu offers a seamless reading experience with its user-friendly interface and allows users to download PDF files for offline reading. Apart from dedicated platforms, search engines also play a crucial role in finding free PDF files. Google, for instance, has an advanced search feature that allows users to filter results by file type. By specifying the file type as "PDF," users can find websites that offer free PDF downloads on a specific topic. While downloading The Life You Save free PDF files is convenient, its important to note that copyright laws must be respected. Always ensure that the PDF files you download are legally available for free. Many authors and publishers voluntarily provide free PDF versions of their work, but its essential to be cautious and verify the authenticity of the source before downloading The Life You Save. In conclusion, the internet offers numerous platforms and websites that allow users to download free PDF files legally. Whether its classic literature, research papers, or magazines, there is something for everyone. The platforms mentioned in this article, such as Project Gutenberg, Open Library, Academia.edu, and Issuu, provide access to a vast collection of PDF files.
