

Theory of Structuration

- Giddens rejects “counterposing structure and freedom.” What does this mean?
- Structure is both enabling and constraining
  - Structure not a barrier to action, but involved in its production: Past always implicated in present
  - Structure can enable new forms of agency
- “Structure performs personality and society simultaneously, but in neither case exhaustively, because of the significance of unintended consequences and unacknowledged conditions” (238).
