Discussions of "Americanism" in the Illustrated American are generally not addressed to individual readers, but to the nation as a whole. The magazine's editors and writers were aware of the importance of the magazine as a national forum, and they used it to discuss the nation's problems and to propose solutions. The magazine's editors and writers were also aware of the importance of the magazine as a national forum, and they used it to discuss the nation's problems and to propose solutions.
