the speech detailed Washington's questions and concerns that follow China's successful integration into the international economy and global institutions. The National Bureau of Asian Research NBR is pleased to present four essays that evaluate the implications of the deputy secretary's speech p 3 China's Energy Strategy Gabriel B. Collins, 2008 A variety of viewpoints is offered in this timely analysis of China's economy and the future shape of Beijing's energy consumption. The authors all noted authorities in the fields of economics, diplomacy, energy, and defense consider an unprecedented range of influences and factors to avoid the limitations of looking at the subject myopically or with political bias. They conclude that while energy insecurity could eventually lead to an arms race at sea or even a naval conflict that neither side wants, there is ample room for Sino-American energy dialogue and cooperation in the maritime domain. North Korea Policy Linus Hagström, Marie Söderberg, 2006 Bringing together issues that are highly relevant to contemporary Japanese foreign policy, this comprehensive text analyzes the formation of the North Korea policy in the context of great power relations in East Asia.

Have Southeast Asian states accepted that the primary threat their countries face is Al Qaeda inspired terrorist violence or are other security concerns deemed more pressing? This study investigates threat perceptions in four Southeast Asian countries: Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Singapore. It probes the extent to which their security concerns align with those of Washington, together with their preferred means for dealing with the phenomenon of terrorist violence. The central findings are that in all four countries the U.S. counterterrorism security agenda has shaped security perceptions as well as security behavior, though to a greater extent in the Philippines and Singapore than in Indonesia and Malaysia. However, the most important effect in Southeast Asia of this change in the U.S. security priority after 9/11 has been sociopolitical in nature, even where an individual government might not perceive the threat from terrorism to be the major security challenge that it faces. In each of the four states, involvement in the U.S. decision to give overwhelming attention to counterterrorism action has sharpened the focus on long-standing security concerns, especially those connected with the security of the political regime or unity of society. In sum, these countries' domestic concerns interact in complex and subtle ways with their security relationship with the United States as well as affecting the methods that the individual governments have used to deal with actual or potential terrorist violence inside their countries European Journal of East Asian Studies ,2008 Reluctant Restraint Evan S. Medeiros,2007 This book examines how and why China has moved over the last twenty years from opposing nonproliferation of missiles and nuclear weapons to support proliferation
