Strategic Appraisal 1997:

Strategic Appraisal 1997: Strategy and Defense Planning for the 21st Century ,1997 For U S defense planners these are the best of times and the worst of times On the one hand with the collapse of our erstwhile Cold War adversary basic questions of national security strategy are once again in play In light of this change there has never been greater scope for reviewing U S national objectives and threats to them creatively weighing these against resources available and crafting a strategy suitable to new and emerging conditions At the same time extraordinary developments emerging from the technology base are opening up possibilities for radically new ways of conducting military operations Taken together these trends should spark a wide ranging set of debates about the best way for this nation to go about protecting and advancing its interests in the future the roles that military power should play in U S national security strategy and the appropriate size and mix of U S military forces Yet to date these debates have seemed constricted if not stillborn Perhaps one reason for this is that Americans have not yet embraced a broad set of guiding objectives for U S foreign policy and security strategy Too the shrinking of the defense budget poses a seemingly endless set of management challenges as we try to downsize the defense establishment without severely disrupting the activities of commanders and forces in the field Resource constraints have also heightened sensitivities so that at the level of military force structure and program analysis it is difficult to escape the feeling that every position is evaluated first through the lens of Service parochialism

China Strategic Review ,1997 A Tool for Evaluating Force Modernization Options Tim Bonds,1998 Military resource allocation choices are often continuous especially when as now international events and domestic budgets require significant changes in the character and capabilities of U S military forces With major changes occurring in systems forces and the way those forces are used it is more important than ever that new concepts be evaluated against an integrated set of capability needs based on future missions and operational objectives Naval War College

Review Naval War College (U.S.),1998 Analytical Methods for Studies and Experiments on "Transforming the Force" Paul K. Davis,J. H. Bigelow,Jimmie McEver,1999 The Department of Defense is motivated by both opportunities and necessity to transform the force over the years ahead by exploiting modern technology and operational concepts associated with the revolution in military affairs and by making related organizational changes This documented briefing provides a background review describing a broad transformation strategy then discusses and illustrates how analysis supported by models and simulations including gaming can supplement and guide empirical work such as joint experiments The approach is illustrated for the problem of halting an invading army with long range precision fires playing a major role A great deal of insight about the general problem can be obtained from analysis at different levels of resolution with a family of models This process in turn identifies important kinds of information that can be obtained only from empirical work such as joint field experiments

America's Space Sentinels Jeffrey Richelson,1999 During much of the Cold War America s first line of defense was in outer space a network of secret satellites that could provide instant warning of an enemy missile launch The presence of these infrared sensors orbiting 22 000 miles above the earth discouraged a Soviet first strike and stabilized international relations between the superpowers and they now play a crucial role in monitoring the missile programs of China India and other emerging nuclear powers Jeffrey

Richelson has written the first comprehensive history of this vital program tracing its evolution from the late 1950s to the present He puts Defense Support Program operations in the context of world events from Russian missile programs to the Gulf War and explains how DSP s infrared sensors are used to detect meteorites monitor forest fires and even gather

Although the two intertwined at first the contributions of these settlement women to the development of the administrative state have been largely lost as the new field of public administration evolved from the research bureaus and diverged from social work Camilla Stivers now shows how public administration came to be dominated not just by science and business but also by masculinity calling into question much that is taken for granted about the profession and creating an alternative vision of public service

The Cold War U.S. Army Ingo Trauschweizer,2008 Focuses on the Seventh Army in West Germany the largest and best prepared field army ever deployed by the U S in peacetime to show how the U S army redefined its identity structure and mission in order to avoid obsolescence during the Cold War era of nuclear weapons and air power
