The vestibular system is a complex system that allows us to sense our position and movement in space. It consists of the utricle, saccule, and the three semicircular canals. The utricle and saccule contain otoliths that detect linear acceleration and gravity. The three semicircular canals contain endolymph and detect angular acceleration. The vestibular system is closely linked to the other senses, particularly vision and proprioception. Disorders of the vestibular system can lead to a variety of symptoms, including dizziness, vertigo, and balance problems. These disorders can be diagnosed using a variety of tests, including the caloric test, the Hallpike maneuver, and the Dix-Hallpike maneuver. Treatment for vestibular disorders often involves a combination of medication, physical therapy, and surgery.
