

The cooling challenge

Effects on global warming and the ozone depletion

Our planet is warming quickly. Rising temperatures, growing populations, and urbanisation lead to increased use of cooling. With growing cooling demand, also the indirect greenhouse gas emissions from electricity consumption increase.

The impact on emissions becomes even greater when considering the direct emissions from fluorinated (and chlorinated) refrigerants used in conventional cooling systems. The use of those refrigerants further increases global warming and ozone depletion.

The cooling challenge is to break this vicious cycle and tackle growing cooling demand while mitigating its adverse impacts on the ozone layer and the climate.

Indirect emissions from conventional (fossil based) power generation to supply cooling appliances with electricity.

Direct emissions
by use of fluorinated (and chlorinated) refrigerants often occur and are caused by leakage, careless recharging and disposal or accidents.

Subcommittee on Energy and Power, 1989 The Renewable Energy Directive and the challenges for the Global Biodiesel Industry Markus Beck, 2012-11-27 Master's Thesis from the year 2012 in the subject Energy Sciences grade 1.0 cole des hautes études commerciales de Paris FGV Sao Paulo language English abstract In response to climate change and unsustainable energy consumption the European Parliament launched a climate and energy package in 2009 This included the 20 20 20 Energy Strategy aimed at decreasing the effects of climate change in particular by lowering greenhouse gas GHG emissions by 2020 This 10 year action plan proposes measures to increase the current efficiency levels of energy use and raises the share of renewable energies within the energy mix for all 27 EU Member States As a result the increased use of biofuels particularly in the transport sector will be an important part of a more complex framework Although biofuels represent only two per cent of total transport fuels used political incentives technology and efficiency improvements could increase this by eight per cent in Europe by 2020 In line with the 20 20 20 Strategy the Renewable Energy Directive RED was introduced to regulate the overall biofuel market amongst others Based on the RED's definition of sustainability different certification schemes emerged aimed at creating a uniform biofuel standard within Europe At present the overall scale and scope of environmental and social impacts associated with the biofuel supply chain are not well defined and this will be evaluated within this thesis Furthermore close ties between the biofuel supply chain and other sectors including food and crude oil industries lead to associations with issues such as deforestation pollution and food supply shortages Thus this thesis will analyse whether RED actually supports such a low carbon pathway or it mainly supports the local industry As such the RED has been critically regarded as a market protectionist mechanism for the European agricultural and biofuel industry against the comparatively more competitive biodiesel imports from Argentina and Indonesia Finally the EU set a tone with its Directive encouraging international collaborations with other governments to work towards sustainable energy measures as part of a universal climate change solution The Challenge of Global Stewardship Maura A. assume its responsibility in making contributions to global sustainable development Based on the principles of fairness and efficiency this study creatively puts forward two principles of global governance on climate change The first entails replacement of the two group schema of developed and developing countries with a four group model based on the Human Development Index HDI The second entails application of the resulting model to specify the major emitters as principal contributors to emission reduction In addition it proposes a two step strategy for China to tackle the issue of climate change This book makes it clear that China should proactively engage in relevant international cooperation actively participate in international climate negotiations make clear commitments to reduce emissions and assume the obligations of a responsible power to achieve sustainable and green development
