

Objectivity: An Introduction

Students demonstrate an ability to describe an experience after reading historic documents simply from the documents without specifying or putting the experience in a context. The lack of contextualization often illustrates that students have good ability to understand "what" happened in a source. The typical contextualized activity helps students to see how the source fits the conditions that created it (time, place, audience, etc.) and to provide historical evidence to help explain the source. Students are asked to make their own, and to become critical of their own, history. Students are expected to use the organizational skills they already have in developing a paragraph. Students are given an opportunity to give their own contextualized evidence to the source. The teacher is expected to give the students a chance to give their own evidence to the source.
