Technological Capabilities And Export Success In Asia:

Technological Capabilities and Export Success in Asia Dieter Ernst, Tom Ganiatsos, Lynn Mytelka, 2003-09-02 What accounts for export success A team of international contributors show that learning and capability formation are critical to sustain competitiveness Through a series of case studies of firms in the textile and garment and electronics industries of five Asian economies Korea Taiwan Thailand Indonesia and Vietnam Technological Capabilities and Export Success in Asia demonstrates that cheap labour combined with currency devaluation is no longer sufficient for export success

Technological Capabilities and Export Success in Asia Dieter Ernst, 2016 This book demonstrates through a series of case studies of firms in the electronics and textiles industries of five Asian countries Korea Taiwan Thailand Indonesia and Vietnam that learning and capability formation are critical to sustain export competitiveness Specially the case studies demonstrate that continuous innovation in product design production processes management routines marketing and the organization of production are crucial for breaking into export markets and for expanding market share

Technological Capabilities and Export Success in Asia Dieter Ernst, Thomas George Ganiatsos, Lynn Krieger Mytelka, 1998 This book shows how cheap labour combined with currency devaluation is no longer sufficient for export success through a series of case studies of textile and garment and electronics industries in five Asian economies Technological capabilities and export success, 1997 Crisis and Innovation in Asian Technology William W. Keller, Richard J. Samuels, 2003-02-03 In mid May 1997 a financial crisis erupted in Asia after an attack by private investors on the baht the Thai currency The crisis spread quickly across the region where investor confidence plummeted resulting in massive capital outflows stock market collapses high unemployment and even insurrection The Asian economic miracle that had stimulated so much awe and even dread now invoked pity and apprehension in greater measure The contributors to this volume investigated change in the innovation and production systems of Asian states in response to economic and political upheaval They conducted empirical studies of several regional industries autos semiconductors and hard disk drives and seven different national economies China Malaysia Japan Singapore South Korea Thailand and Taiwan In the face of crisis and global competition the Asian states superimposed change at the margins seeking unique technohybrid solutions to build capabilities to compete in local regional and even global markets Foreign Firms, Technological Capabilities and Economic Performance Rajah Rasiah, 2004 This book by Rajah Rasiah and colleagues is a major step forward It bases the analysis of foreign and local firms in a range of developing countries squarely on measuring and comparing technological capabilities This is a significant advance in methodological terms It also yields very interesting results What adds to the interest is the range of countries covered from industrially advanced nations like Brazil South Africa and Malaysia to relatively backward ones such as Kenya and Uganda The book is thoroughly researched rigorous in its analysis and comprehensive in its coverage of the literature From the foreword by Sanjaya Lall This volume contains a number of original well researched and empirically valuable essays and case studies on the role which foreign firms may play in upgrading the technological capabilities and competitiveness of seven developing countries Professor Rasiah is to be congratulated for assembling such a varied and interesting set of contributions each of which should be essential reading for all those interested in the impact of foreign direct investment on economic development and structural transformation John H Dunning University of Reading UK and Rutgers University US Rajah Rasiah's broad ranging study breaks new ground in analyzing the relationship between a country's technological capabilities the activities of foreign firms and economic performance His rigorous yet flexible framework which incorporates institutional complexities into a statistical analysis allows him to look at the development process in seven diverse countries His findings that the relative advantages of foreign multinational firms over local firms declines over the development trajectory should change our thinking as well as our policies This book is a must read for anyone interested in the role that technology plays in the development process Clair Brown University of California Berkeley US This book fills an important gap in the literature on foreign direct investment and economic development Based on an excellent review of existing theories comparative case studies from Africa Asia and Latin America explore diverse approaches that developing countries can use to benefit from the presence of foreign firms to improve technological capabilities and economic performance A must read for students interested in contemporary pathways to industrialization Dieter Ernst East West Center Honolulu US This book employs novel techniques to compare technological capabilities and economic performance in seven countries at varying stages of industrial development Brazil Costa Rica Indonesia Kenya Malaysia South Africa and Uganda The author uses a methodology drawn from the technology capability framework but extensively adapts and simplifies it to extract common cross industry parameters for statistical analysis He employs the framework to compare the technological local sourcing and performance dynamics of foreign and local firms in a variety of industries The results offer a common synthesis and fresh ideas on the importance of foreign firms in technological capability building and economic performance in developing countries They reveal that although foreign firms tend to enjoy higher human resource and process technology capabilities in the most underdeveloped economies in the more advanced nations this comparative advantage is significantly eroded The author shows how the institutional and systemic strength of a country can help to explain the level of participation of foreign firms in R D activities He also identifies domestic and regional markets infrastructure incentives natural resources and human capital as important factors in stimulating significant R D investment by foreign firms This interesting and well written book presents an original examination of the dynamic relationship between foreign firms technology innovation and economic performance in Asia Africa and Latin America Academics policymakers and NGOs interested in development economics technology policy and trade will find this to be an extremely valuable resource

The Complementary Role of Exports and R&D Investments as Sources of Productivity Growth Bee Yan Aw, Mark J. Roberts, Tor Winston, 2005 This paper examines two potential channels of knowledge acquisition that underlie firm productivity growth in the Taiwanese electronics industry participation in the export market and investments in R D and or worker training We focus on the argument that a firm's own investments in R D are necessary for the firm to assimilate knowledge or expertise gained from foreign contacts and thus are an important component of the process of learning by exporting Firm level panel data from 1986 1991 and 1996 is used to investigate a firm's decision to invest in these two activities and to assess the effects of these investments on the firm's future total factor productivity The empirical model consists of four equations The firm's decisions to export and invest in R D and or worker training are modeled with a bivariate probit model that recognizes the interdependence of the decisions We then estimate how participation in these investment activities alters the firm's future productivity trajectory while controlling for the potential selection bias introduced by endogenous firm exit The primary empirical findings are that on average firms that export but do not invest in R D and or worker training have significantly higher future productivity than firms that do not participate in either activity In addition firms that export and invest in R D and or worker training have significantly higher future productivity than firms that only export These findings are consistent with the hypothesis that export experience is an important source of productivity growth for Taiwanese firms and that firm investments in R D and worker training facilitate their ability to benefit from their exposure to the export market

Asian Growth and Foreign Capital J. Thomas Lindblad, 2002 The spectacular economic development in eastern Asia at the end of last century brought international watchers to despair twice first the growth later the crisis They could not explain both phenomena This book tries to fill the gap The authors use the term international capital flow as the key They see the quick growth and the sudden crisis as sides of the same coin With this they bridge the literature on the Asian growth on the one hand with the literature on the Asian crisis literature on the other J Thomas Lindblad is lecturer in economic history and the history of SouthEast Asia at the University of Leiden
