Do translation universals exist at the syntactic-semantic level? A study using semantic role labeling and textual entailment analysis of English-Chinese translations

Letao Wang^{1,2} & Yue Jiang^{1,2*}

Albeit extensive studies of translation universals at lexical and grammatical levels, there has been scant research at the syntactic-semantic level. To bridge this gap, this study employs semantic role labeling and textual entailment analysis to compare Chinese translations with English source texts and non-translated Chinese original texts. The research has found substantial evidence for translation universals like explication, simplification, and levelling out at the syntactic-semantic level, which is illustrated by significant differences between syntactic-semantic features of Chinese translations and those of English source texts and Chinese original texts. This suggests a distinct syntactic-semantic uniqueness of Chinese translations, wherein the overall features exhibit an "eclectic" characteristic, showcasing contrasting outcomes such as explication identified as S-universal and implication deemed T-universal. This could be attributed to the gravitational pull from the two language systems. In the inspection of specific semantic roles, features of agents and discourse markers are found to be evidence for both S-explication and T-explication, potentially reflecting the role of socio-cultural factors in shaping the uniqueness of syntactic-semantic features of Chinese translations. These findings further underscore the complexity inherent in translation, highlighting its function as a dynamic balance system.

Linguistics and Language Behavior Abstracts ,1991 Patient-Subject Constructions in Mandarin Chinese Xiaoling He,2019-06-15

As a distinctive syntactic structure in Mandarin Chinese the Patient Subject Construction PSC is one of the most interesting but least well understood structures in the language This book offers a comprehensive account of the history structure meaning and use of the PSC Unlike previous descriptions which were framed in terms of pre existing grammatical notions such as topicalization passivization and ergativization this book offers a fresh look at the PSC in which its syntactic and semantic as well as its discourse functions are examined within the system of major construction types of the language as a whole The PSC being low in transitivity serves primarily the function of backgrounding in discourse Typologically the PSC bears a resemblance to middle constructions in Indo European and other languages raising interesting questions about ways to understand congruent and divergent syntactic structures across the world's languages This book will be of interest to students of Chinese Linguistics as well as Language Typology
