Tactical Missile Design Eugene L. Fleeman,2001 This is the first textbook offered for tactical missile design It is oriented toward the needs of aerospace engineering students missile engineers and missile program managers It is intended to provide a basis for including tactical missile design as part of the aerospace engineering curriculum providing new graduates with the knowledge they will need in their careers The author s decades of experience in the development of tactical missiles and their technologies is presented in an integrated handbook method for missile design. It uses simple closed form analytical expressions that are physics based to provide insight into the primary driving parameters. The text also provides example calculations of rocket powered and ramjet powered baseline missiles, typical values of missile parameters, examples of the characteristics of current operational missiles, discussion of the enabling subsystems and technologies of tactical missiles and the current projected state of the art of tactical missiles. Included with the text is a CD ROM containing electronic versions of the figures, 15 videos showing examples of loading missiles, pilot actions, flight trajectories, countermeasures, etc. and configuration sizing methods. United States Army Combat Forces Journal, 1953

The Commanders' Integrated Training Tool for the Close Combat Tactical Trainer, 1999. This report describes the design of the Commander's Integrated Training Tool (CITT) for the Close Combat Tactical Trainer (CCTT), a system of armored vehicle manned module simulators and workstations that allows units to train collective armor and infantry tasks at the platoon through battalion task force level. CITT will allow commanders and other unit trainers to select, create, or modify structured training exercises for use when the unit trains using the CCTT. Although the project focused on the CITT design, it also included the development and refinement of a CITT prototype in standalone and distributed in tern et accessible versions. Additionally, the project included the development of an information overview presented in the form of videotapes and included in the CITT prototype and the development of an implementation strategy and fielding plan. This report describes the activities involved in the development of the listed products along with the lessons learned during project completion.

Development of Thin Film Electroluminescent Display Techniques. E. J. Soxman, 1967. An electroluminescent display panel of the cross grid matrix type was fabricated on a 10.34 x 10.34 inch glass substrate using improved vacuum deposition procedures and a high brightness manganese doped ZnS phosphor. This panel contained 256 x 256 active elements within an area of approximately 7 x 7 inches. Linear resolution was 36 elements per inch with a cross conductor width of 0.020 inch and a separation of 0.007 inch. The display panel was successfully used as a viewing screen for rear projected images. The brightness voltage relationship of the thin film phosphor was such that a cross suppression ratio in excess of 10,000 to 1 was achieved with an excited element brightness of 100 ft L. Performance measurements indicated that the optimum drive frequency was about 15 kHz. For pulsed operation, a burst frequency of 37.5 Hz, a carrier frequency of 15 kHz, and a duty cycle of 0.25 percent gave an average brightness of a few foot Lamberts. Useful operating lifetime of several hundred hours under the above conditions was indicated by preliminary data. The variation in brightness uniformity over a group of cells near the center of the panel was less than 7 percent at an average brightness level of 16 ft L. A brightness reduction of about 12 percent was observed at a single cell when the contacting configuration was varied on the stannic oxide electrode.
