The Battle For Alabama's Wilderness Saving The Great Gymnasiums Of Nature:

The Battle for Alabama's Wilderness John Nevitt Randolph,2005 Traces the development of Alabama's environmental movement from its beginnings with the establishment of The Alabama Conservancy in the late 1960s and early 70s to the preservation efforts of present day activist groups The grassroots effort to preserve Alabama's Wilderness Areas spanned thirty years from 1967 to 1997 The first battle to establish the Sipsey Wilderness in the Bankhead National Forest was the catalyst for reform of national policy regarding public land preserves in the eastern United States It and the later campaigns to establish the Cheaha Wilderness to enlarge the Sipsey and to create the Dugger Mountain Wilderness are classic tales of citizen activists overcoming the quagmire of federal bureaucracy and the intransigence of hostile politicians Early political opposition to proposed designation or expansion of wilderness areas in Alabama was based on the belief that limiting development of these lands would negatively impact the state's powerful timber industry In response to such opposition serious environmental activism was born in Alabama Using newspaper reports Congressional testimony interviews and his own recollections John Randolph traces the development of Alabama's environmental movement from its beginnings with the establishment of The Alabama Conservancy in the late 1960s and early 70s to the preservation efforts of present day activist groups such as the Alabama Environmental Council the Cahaba River Society and the Alabama Wilderness Alliance The Battle for Alabama's Wilderness permits all of the players pro and con to speak for themselves but the heroes people like Mary Burks Blanche Dean Joab Thomas and Pete Conroy embody the vision hope and persistence required of those who succeed in their preservation efforts Randolph's account is a testament to the power of grassroots citizen groups who are committed to a common cause and inspired by a shared ideal     Exploring Wild Alabama Kenneth M. Hodge,2019 Alabama s Public Wilderness Reconstruction Natural Resources and the End of the Southern Commons 1850 1905 examines the environmental history of the longleaf pine forest in nineteenth century Alabama The research draws on newspapers and census reports and the records of a federal land office in the state s capitol Once the domain of innumerable American Indian tribes the public lands owned by the federal government became a common resource for a range of people in the antebellum period used for foraging grazing and squatting In the aftermath of the Civil War Republican legislators passed the Southern Homestead Act which reserved southern public lands numbered at some 47 million acres in 1865 for African Americans naturalized by the Fourteenth Amendment and for small scale white settlers This experiment in promoting the Republican goal of free soil failed Poor soil conditions and a wave of white backlash doomed the Act and its repeal by ex Confederate Democrats in 1876 opened these marginalized lands to direct purchase Northern lumber companies came bought much of the remaining public domain and within two decades cut down the ancient longleaf forest A new generation of scientific experts first promoted this economic development and later raised concerns about the environmental devastation of poorly regulated logging A once great forest with its original inhabitants removed became a space for democracy but the southern captains of industry privatized even these most rural places on the road to the Jim Crow Era This dissertation argues that a pitched battle between the forces of industrial capitalism and egalitarian democracy took place not only in city centers or scientific laboratories but in the middle of nowhere In the nineteenth century the public domain an area cleared of its original inhabitants then held in trust by the federal government used but unsettled and not owned in fee simple by its citizens became an arena where industrialists and citizens alike sought to bend natural resources namely land lumber and minerals to their own economic benefits
