Some limited ethnographic research has been conducted on the impact of urbanization on the lives of rural women. However, these surveys are often conducted in urban areas and are not representative of the rural context. In contrast, studies have been conducted on the impact of urbanization on the lives of rural women, showing many similarities and supporting the theoretical. Accordingly, research on rural women's lives and their responses to urbanization is a necessary component of the study of women and the city. This study, which focuses on the responses of rural women to urbanization, is a step towards this goal. The study is also intended to contribute to the understanding of the impact of urbanization on rural women's lives and to the development of policies to support rural women in their adaptation to urbanization.
