Bartlett,1982-01-15 EXCERPT The half century between the War of 1812 and the Civil War was above all an age of expansiveness in America Whether measured in terms of population territory urbanization economic growth technological development democratization or nationalism American society was transformed quantitatively and qualitatively at a spectacular rate What Americans thought about themselves their country and their universe was always tightly linked to the changes they confronted and the ideas they shared and disputed were both a product of and a commentary upon the expanding political social and economic democracy of the period Strictly speaking of course there was no American mind during this period since Americans were then as they are now of many minds Child and adult man and woman native and foreign born Northerner and Southerner slave and citizen everyone who lived in America lived in a world of ideas and values shaped in part by a particular history and particular circumstances However as Tocqueville observed after visiting America in the 1830s the citizens of any vigorous society are usually rallied and held together by certain predominant ideas Except for the chapter on the slave holding South we will be concerned here with the dominant ideas and values most Americans shared and identified with their new nation during the years from 1815 to 1860 Race and the American Romantics Vincent Freimarck,Bernard Rosenthal,1971 Consists of a thematic arrangement of texts by American Romantics presenting their positions on slavery Lost Soul Amern Politics John P. Diggins,1984-12-18 The Lost Soul of American Politics is a provocative new interpretation of American political thought from the Founding Fathers to the Neo Conservatives Reassessing the motives and intentions of such great political thinkers as Madison Thoreau Lincoln and Emerson John P Diggins shows how these men struggled to create an alliance between the politics of self interest and a religious sense of moral responsibility a tension that still troubles us today Edmund Ruffin, a Biography Betty L. Mitchell,1981 Edmund Ruffin III January 5 1794 June 17 1865 was a wealthy Virginia planter amateur soil scientist and political activist best known as an early advocate for secession of the southern slave states from the United States wikipedia The Journal of East Tennessee History ,1999 Subject Catalog J.
