Social Emergence Societies As Complex Systems:

Social Emergence R. Keith Sawyer, 2005-10-27 Can we understand important social issues by studying individual personalities and decisions Or are societies somehow more than the people in them Sociologists have long believed that psychology can't explain what happens when people work together in complex modern societies In contrast most psychologists and economists believe that if we have an accurate theory of how individuals make choices and act on them we can explain pretty much everything about social life Social Emergence takes a new approach to these longstanding questions Sawyer argues that societies are complex dynamical systems and that the best way to resolve these debates is by developing the concept of emergence focusing on multiple levels of analysis individuals interactions and groups and with a dynamic focus on how social group phenomena emerge from communication processes among individual members This book makes a unique contribution not only to complex systems research but also to social theory

Social Emergence Robert Keith Sawyer, 2014-08-31 Argues that societies are complex dynamical systems that can be understood through the concept of emergence

The Complexity of Human Communication Philip J. Salem,2009 Most communication research and most applications of that research acknowledge the process nature of communication However the material following that acknowledgment conforms to traditional linear and static approaches treating communication as little more than printed text This Print Paradigm persists despite repeated calls to explore the more dynamic nature of communication The author argues that communication is a process analogous to the complexity in other living systems Complexity theory models biological processes similar to how chaos theory treats chemical and physical processes The book begins with a review of philosophical and social psychological thought as a basis for explaining the mathematical and natural science models This volume reviews a remarkable range of material stretching over three centuries The author explains complicated concepts in a simple and often whimsical way and uses practical as well as research examples to bring technical ideas to a wide audience The author develops paradigmatic principles and then describes the process of information and a model of communication as a socially emergent process The early chapters are a foundation for disputing current thinking across a range of concepts such as communication and self stories and storytelling communication and trust and conflict The author concludes by sketching theoretical methodological and practical and ethical challenges The volume is as dynamic and intricate as the complexity of human communication

Emergent Freedom

James W. Haag,2008

Emergentism as a metaphysical option between Reductive Physicalism and Substance Dualism provides a space for free will to be both experientially balanced and evidentially accurate By expanding notions of causation and adopting a process ontology Emergentism reevaluates age old commitments to human free will With Emergentism James W Haag believes Philip Hefner s model of human being the created co creator to be a valuable place to look for dialogue Hefner s claim that the created co creator is simultaneously constrained and free fits securely with Dynamic Theological Naturalism and its acceptance of Emergentism Reframing Discussions Michael B. Sherry,2010 Recitations and discussions are two types of interactions which have long been of interest to researchers who study classroom discourse in secondary English and Social Studies According to research teachers control the discourse during recitations through inauthentic questions requiring pre specified answers In contrast discussions involve shared control and include authentic questions allowing multiple interpretations This research has described recitations and discussions as opposites Moreover recitations and discussions have primarily been distinguished by who speaks and how many answers are possible In defining these interactions in terms of stable categories and a multiplicity of voices and interpretations little attention has been paid to dynamic relationships created through discourse during these interactions If recitations appear to be so persistent how might they be reframed as discussions through negotiation of the roles relationships and responses that are possible and appropriate in an interaction. If discussions involve not only expressing multiple opinions but also engaging with texts and responding to others' perspectives, how do speakers relate their experiences to the topic and build on others' contributions? My dissertation addressed discussions in terms of dynamic discursive relationships through sociolinguistic discourse analysis of field notes, class transcripts, written reflections, and interviews on 28 lessons over one year in an urban 10th grade English class, a suburban 9th grade Social Studies class, and a rural 12th grade Composition class. Based on this research, I make the following claims: Recitations and discussions are not stable discourse patterns determined by individual speakers or individual turns in conversation. In contrast with prior English and Social Studies education research, the teacher's intended purpose did not necessarily determine the nature of the interaction, and inauthentic authentic questions were not necessarily indicators of recitations or discussions. Rather, the discourse seemed to depend on how the interactional frame could be renegotiated among teacher and students. Recitations were reframed as discussions by relating students to the topic through animation and by relating different opinions to each other via double voicing. Animation that cast students as figures in a historical literary event reframed recitations as discussions by describing the topic as one with which students could identify. This finding adds to English and Social Studies education research on how envisionment of story worlds can increase students' comprehension, engagement, and on how imagining themselves into events can increase students' empathy, authority. Double voicing students' comments reframed recitations as discussions by repeating what others had said in ways that provoked debate. This finding adds to English and Social Studies education research on how asking questions about what others have just said can contribute to discussion and on how interpretive questions encourage debate. Discussions can depend on the framing of other classroom interactions. Activities that preceded and followed discussions in these data shaped the frame for discussions. The framing of similar activities among teacher and students during previous classes shaped the frame for discussions. Repeated renegotiation of the frame led to emergence of genres or types of discussions. The dissertation citations contained here are published with the permission of ProQuest LLC. The Symbiotic Man Joël de Rosnay, 2000. Within the past four decades, a powerful scientific methodology has emerged that promises to dramatically recast our concept of nature and mankind's place in it. Unlike the traditional analytical approach which breaks nature down into smaller and smaller constituent parts, chaos theory, the theory of self-organization, and other so-called sciences of complexity explore dynamic systems in their totalities so as to lay bare the great constants governing their emergence, organization, and evolution. Using the tools of complexity, researchers recently have made breakthroughs in the understanding of such diverse phenomena as weather systems, economies, and even the most daunting scientific mystery of all, the mind, as an emergent property of the brain's dense neuronal mazes.
