

United States Government

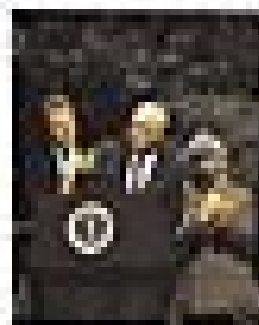

Structure of the Government

The United States is a federal republic. This means that the government is made up of different parts, each with its own responsibilities. The three main branches of the government are the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches. Each branch has a specific role to play in running the country.

The Executive branch is headed by the President. The President is responsible for enforcing the laws and representing the country. The Legislative branch is made up of Congress, which is divided into the House of Representatives and the Senate. Congress is responsible for making laws. The Judicial branch is headed by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court is responsible for interpreting the laws and ensuring they are fair.

Each branch has its own powers and responsibilities. The Executive branch has the power to appoint and remove officials, and to veto laws. The Legislative branch has the power to make laws and to control the budget. The Judicial branch has the power to interpret the laws and to declare laws unconstitutional. This system of checks and balances ensures that no one branch becomes too powerful.
