DIFFERENT TYPES OF MAPS

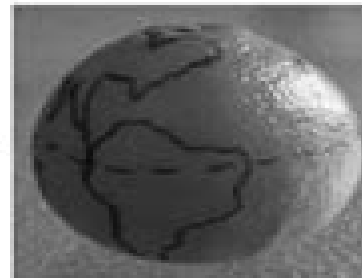

Maps vs. Globes Continued

DIFFERENT TYPES

Because maps are used for locations of all different sizes and show more details than globes, it makes sense that there are many more different kinds of maps than there are globes.

ACCURACY

Have you ever tried to take a round object and make it flat? It can be very difficult. Imagine for a second that you wanted to draw the shapes of continents on an orange. It would look kind of like a globe, right? Now imagine that you decided you wanted to turn your orange globe into an orange map. It would be very difficult and would come out looking like this!

Do you notice how the shapes of the continents are stretched and don't quite look the same? The exact same thing happens when you try to take a different round object (the Earth) and flatten it out to make a map. Since the locations, sizes, shapes, and distances between places don't look the same, that means maps are less accurate and don't show the Earth just like it is as well as a globe can.
