The red horizontal stripe from the eastern Armenian flag was in the days of the first Republic (1918-1922) the color between the double-headed Christian cross of the Russian people. It is a symbol of union and of Armenia's role in the fight for freedom and independence from the Russians and the Ottomans and the new hopes about the country.

Emblem of the Armenian Apostolic Church, which is by far the largest religious organization in Armenia. 87.5% of the Armenian citizens are Christians and only the Armenian Apostolic Church is the official religion of the country. Besides this, the national emblem of the country is a golden eagle, which is a symbol of Armenia's growing freedom of religion.

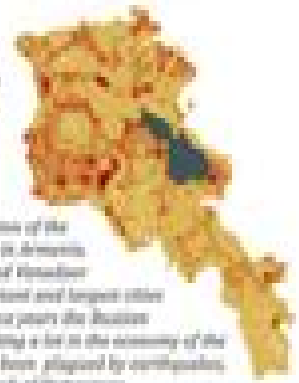

For historical and geographical reasons, it is understandable that Armenia is politically intensely allied with Iran and Russia. Georgia is also of noteworthy importance for the Armenian people, because Georgia acts as an land bridge between Russia and Armenia.

Single representation of the population density in Armenia. Yerevan, Gyumri and Vanadzor are the most important and largest cities of the Republic. Since years the Russian Federation is investing a lot in the economy of the country, which has been plagued by earthquakes, corruption and a lack of democracy.

Even today Armenia is still a militarized country due to the conflict with its neighbor Azerbaijan, which has been ongoing for a long time. In 1988, the war over the Nagorno-Karabakh region broke out for the first time and repeated itself in a similar manner after and during the final decline of Russian/Soviet rule over the South Caucasus region. Today, the border between the two countries is freely tested and guarded by troops. As an act of diplomatic solidarity to Azerbaijan and Turkey, the Politburo government decided not to recognize the young Armenian republic.
