Abstract. Shaanxi Province has a long history, and the famous Tang Dynasty in ancient China was once located here. The cultural background is strong, and the man-made historical landscape relies on its development and the success of the Tang Dynasty Never Nights City also benefits from this. With its successful development, many tourism industries are vying to imitate it. The homogenization of man-made landscapes has affected the sustainable development of Shaanxi's cultural tourism industry. This study mainly focuses on analyzing the problem and giving the way to solve it, finding the problem through field investigation and making a questionnaire to investigate and analyze the problem, and finding the essence of the problem and the way to solve it from the comparative analysis of the two scenic spots of Tang Dynasty Never Nights City and Chongquan Ancient Town. This study proposes several strategies to address landscape homogenization, providing a reference for the future development of man-made historic landscapes and emphasizing the importance of differentiated design and diversified development.

Keywords: Homogenization, Man-made Historical Landscapes, tourism industries, field investigation, making a questionnaire, Tang Dynasty Never Nights City, Chongquan Ancient Town.

1. Introduction

According to data from the Shaanxi Provincial Department of Culture and Tourism, in recent years, the rich cultural and natural heritage resources of Shaanxi Province have gradually attracted widespread attention. It is recognized that it is necessary to strengthen the holistic and systematic protection of these heritage resources in order to promote the deep integration of culture and tourism so as to promote high-quality economic and social development [1]. Culture, as an important part of national development, is gradually penetrating the lives of the public through tourism, a way of cultural communication. Travelers are exposed to, understood, and passed on to culture through travel. However, the rapid development of tourism, the accompanying commercialization trend, excessive administrative intervention, and the involvement of a large number of social capitals have gradually led to the homogenization of the tourism landscape [2].

At present, most of the research on the tourism landscape focuses on the field of rural tourism [3, 4], while the research on man-made historical landscapes could be stronger. Although there are many studies on the phenomenon of homogenization, there are few case studies involving man-made historical landscapes [5, 6], and there needs to be more in-depth systematic discussion on this phenomenon. In order to fill this research gap, this paper deeply reveals the common homogenization problem in contemporary man-made historical landscapes through a comparative analysis of two typical man-made historical landscapes, Tang Dynasty Never Nights City and Chongquan Ancient Town, combined with field research and questionnaire survey and proposes corresponding solutions.

As an innovative model for the integration of culture and tourism [7], since the remarkable success of the Tang Dynasty Never Nights City, many similar landscapes have followed suit, resulting in the phenomenon of blind borrowing and copying in an endless stream and the historical man-made landscapes in Shaanxi and even across the country have gradually presented a "cookie-cutter" situation [8]. Although the proliferation of homogenization presents the prosperity and diversity of various landscapes on the surface, in essence, the design mode of scenic spots converges and lacks unique cultural connotations and personalities, resulting in only a handful of successful cases [2].
