

United States Government

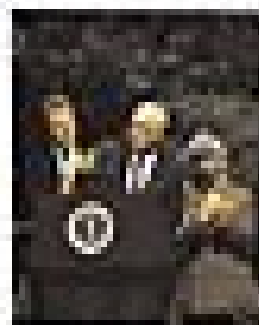

Structure of the Government

The United States is a federal republic. This means that the government is made up of many different parts, each with its own responsibilities. The three main branches of the government are the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches. Each branch has its own set of powers and responsibilities, and they all work together to run the country.

The Executive branch is headed by the President. The President is responsible for enforcing the laws and representing the country. The Legislative branch is made up of the House of Representatives and the Senate. They are responsible for making laws. The Judicial branch is headed by the Supreme Court. They are responsible for interpreting the laws.

Each branch has its own set of powers and responsibilities. The Executive branch can veto laws, while the Legislative branch can override a veto. The Judicial branch can declare laws unconstitutional. This system of checks and balances helps to ensure that no one branch becomes too powerful.

The Legislative branch is responsible for making laws. It is made up of the House of Representatives and the Senate. The House has 435 members, and the Senate has 100 members. The President can veto laws, but the Legislative branch can override a veto with a two-thirds majority.
