Advocacy Groups Lisa Young, Joanna Everitt, 2011-11-01 Seventy percent of Canadians think that advocacy groups are a better vehicle for change than political parties however people involved in these groups are actually more involved in traditional political circles and party politics This volume looks at who participates in these groups which kinds of groups dominate the political agenda what influence lobbying has on the government and how exactly to make advocacy groups a more vibrant and accountable part of political life in this country Advocacy Groups uses the Audit standards of responsiveness inclusiveness and participation to examine advocacy groups in Canada and assess the ways that they contribute to or detract from Canadian democracy It argues that group activity represents an important form of political participation Though some interests face greater organizational challenges than others advocacy groups can play critical compensatory roles for interests that are often unrepresented in traditional political institutions It also finds that while Canadian advocacy groups employ a wide range of strategies to draw attention to their concerns those with greater financial resources generally have greater access to government decision makers This has been accentuated by recent trends in the reduction of government funding to advocacy groups The book concludes with several recommendations for best practices that groups can follow in their internal organization and efforts to influence public policy as well as for actions that governments can take to engage in constructive consultation with groups

Whittington, Glen Williams, 2000      Politics in Canada Robert J. Jackson, Doreen Jackson, 1998      New Books on Women and Feminism , 1994      Beyond Policy Analysis Leslie A.
