These studies on team structure, and possibly other aspects, all fit the idea that groups (like individuals) are structured along the dimension of group cohesiveness. But they have not shown that cohesiveness causes the team structure. It is the other way around: the team structure causes the cohesiveness. The team structure is the cause or antecedent of cohesiveness and engagement because of the social context created. The team structure is the social context for the behaviors (engagement) and processes.
