The Potato Farmer John E. McCorkle, Jr., Jr McCorkle, 2004-04-01 The old men from the pub would tell their tales of leprechauns trolls ogres and such Sean Omally had heard every story that had been told but he had never believed any of them Sean was not unlike any other 16 year old growing up in the 1860s Living in Ireland meant that he was the son of a potato farmer as was his father and his father before him His days were spent plowing fields and planting potatoes side by side with his father It was a simple life A good life but a hard life Times were getting harder for the Omally family Every summer the drought was worse and fewer and fewer potatoes could be harvested The farm that had been passed down through the generations was now in danger of being sold to an Englishman Sean fancied a young Scottish girl Mary Kathryn of the Ruthiford clan In the early evenings they would meet at their secret place It was there that Sean made his intentions clear He had no idea of the adventure that he was about to embark on as he journeyed to find the answers to saving the farm and proving himself worthy to wed Mary Kathryn Sean finds the courage within himself to overcome a slue of creatures big and smalla Oh yeah Sean may just change his mind about the old men from the pub and their stories Seed Potato
