Saying it Ain't So Debra A. Dagavarian, 1987 Saying It Ain't So explores the themes which emerge from popularly read children's stories about baseball. This book examines the first piece of baseball fiction which appeared in 1882 and was written for children. Why does baseball more than other sports teach values of supportiveness, responsibility, and fairness? How do children's stories bring out these values? This work reveals the unique qualities of baseball which set it apart from other sports and truly make it our national pastime. Cumulation in International Relations Research Dina A. Zinnes, Joel David Singer, 1981 Steering the Polity Itzhak Galnoor, 1982-05 Galnoor examines a political system that of Israel as a network of communication both to and from the power centre. He develops a new theory of political communication and applies it in order to define the distinction between political development per se and democratic development. His synthesis of politics, sociology, and communication may be the basis for truly comparative studies of how policies and decisions to use power are made. A most useful volume in any academic library collection on the Middle East or participatory democracies, especially those libraries serving upper division students and up.
