Does the Development of Cognitive Dissonance Inhibit the Success of Influencer Marketing? ,2021-09-15 Master s Thesis from the year 2020 in the subject Business economics Offline Marketing and Online Marketing grade 1 3 language English abstract The present master s thesis addresses the subject of the development of cognitive dissonance and its potential inhibitory effects on the success of influencer marketing The focus lies on the one hand on the investigation of the topic on the foundation of a theoretical literature analysis of meaningful theories as well on the other hand on the execution of an empirical study The theoretical investigation of the topic is carried out in the introductory chapter Identification and Initial Review of Key Literature on the basis of literature and applied practical examples The empirical investigation is based on the research question Which effect do cognitive dissonances have on the purchase of products advertised by influencers and the hypothesis Consumers tend to possess unconscious automated attitudes in the arrangement of bias or stereotypes towards influencer marketing In order to investigate these an implicit association test with pictorial and literal stimuli to the categories influencer and classic advertising figure was created In this study 59 persons participated as valid test participants The central results of the research show that both explicit and implicit attitudes towards influencers and their form of marketing exist Cognitive dissonances resulting from this are very likely though an actual slowing down of these attitudes on the purchasing process of products advertised by influencers cannot be confirmed fully Since the proven implicit attitudes only show a medium IAT effect a retardation of the purchase decision can be assumed However as current figures from influencer marketing indicate a final inhibition cannot be assumed in total

Social Interaction in Animals: Linking Experimental Approach and Social Network Analysis Cédric Sueur, Frédéric Mery, 2017-03-14 Understanding the link between individual behaviour and population organization and functioning has long been central to ecology and evolutionary biology. Behaviour is a response to intrinsic and extrinsic factors including individual state, ecological factors or social interactions. Within a group, each individual can be seen as part of a network of social interactions, varying in strength, type and dynamic. The structure of this network can deeply impact the ecology and evolution of individuals, populations and species. Within a group, social interactions can take many forms and may significantly affect an individual's fitness. These interactions may result in complex systems at the group level, such as in the case of collective decisions to migrate, to build a nest or to forage. Among them, social transmission of information has been studied mostly in vertebrates, fish, birds and mammals, including humans. In insects, social learning has been unambiguously demonstrated in social Hymenoptera, but this probably reflects limited research effort. Recent evidence shows that even non-eusocial insects, such as Drosophila, cockroaches and crickets, can copy the behaviour of others. Compared to individual learning, which requires a trial and error period, every generation, social learning can potentially result in the stable transmission of behaviours across generations, leading to cultural traditions in some species. The study of the processes which may facilitate or prevent this transmission and the analyses of the relationship between social network structure and efficiency of social transmission, became, in recent years, an emerging and promising field of research. The goal of this research topic is to present the genetic and socio-environmental factors affecting social interaction and information or pathogen transmission, with the integration of experimental approaches, social network analyses and modelling. Importantly, we aim to understand whether a relationship between social network structures and dynamics can reflect the efficiency of social transmission, i.e., can we use social network analysis to predict the social transmission of information or of pathogen, collective decision making and ultimately the evolutionary trajectory of a group?

Democracy and Climate Change Frederic Hanusch, 2017-07-28 Democracy and Climate Change explores the various ways in which democratic principles can lead governments to respond differently to climate change. The election cycle can lead to short-termism, which often appears to be at odds with the long-term nature of climate change, with its latency between cause and effect. However, it is clear that some democracies deal with climate change better than others, and this book demonstrates that overall stronger democratic qualities tend to correlate with improved climate performance. Beginning by outlining a general concept of democratic efficacy, the book provides an empirical analysis of the influence of the quality of democracy on climate change performance across dozens of countries. The specific case study of Canada's Kyoto Protocol process is then used to explain the mechanisms of democratic influence in depth. The wide-ranging research presented in the book opens up several new and exciting avenues of enquiry and will be of considerable interest to researchers with an interest in comparative politics, democracy studies and environmental policies.
