The transition into adolescence begins the move toward independence from parents and the need to establish one's own values personal and sexual identity and the skills and competencies needed to compete in adult society. Independence requires young people to renegotiate family rules and degree of supervision by parents a process that can generate conflict and withdrawal from parents. At the same time social networks expand and relationships with peers and adults in new social contexts equal or exceed in importance the relationships with parents. The criteria for success and acceptance among peers and adults change Adapting to all of these changes in relationships social contexts status and performance criteria can generate great stress feelings of rejection and anger at perceived or real failure Young people may be attracted to violent behaviour as a way of asserting their independence of the adult world and its rules as a way of gaining the attention and respect of peers as a way of compensating for limited personal competencies or as a response to restricted opportunities for success at school or in the community Good relationships with parents during childhood will help in a successful transition to adolescence but they do not guarantee it Understanding Behavior Disorders Douglas W.
