Department of Modern Indian Language and Literary Studies,
University of Delhi

Abstract: Folklore is playing a pivotal role in propagating the ideas of ethnicity and identity in the world. By referring the value of folklore every community of the world try to glorify their past and present in modern times. In India, the role of folklore towards ethnic and identity movement is taking remarkable place especially in North Eastern India. The main aims of this paper are: i. to highlight how the Rabhas of Assam using the folkloric element in the political movement, ii. to study the role of folklore in integrating diverse groups and iii. to explore the role of folklore towards serving the ethnic unity and nationalism among the Rabhas.

Methodology

The study was based on amalgamation of primary and secondary method. For the primary method, interview method was conducted for collecting relevant data. A few printed books, magazines and others materials published by the distinguished publishers and the reception committee of conferences were used for the secondary sources.

Keywords: Folklore, ethnicity, identity, politics, movement

Introduction:

The Rabhas are one of the scheduled tribes living mainly in Assam, West Bengal and foreign country like Bangladesh. Linguistically the Rabha belongs to the Indo Mongoloid group of people. According to F. Buchanan and Hamilton, "the aspects of socio-religious and material life of the Rabhas have similarities with those of the Pani-Koch."¹ E. Dalton on the other hand, argues "The Rabhas and the Hajongs are the branches of Chakari race and connected with the Garo."² According to B.H. Hodgson, "The Rabhas belong to the Great Bodo or Mech."³ Presently, there are 11 sub-groups in the Rabha tribe namely Maitoria, Hana, Dahori, Panu, Sunga, Rangdani, Bitola, Kosa, Totala, Mohadi and Dumesha.

After the decades of independence, the Rabhas along with other ethnic groups of Assam like Bodo, Karbi, Tiwa, Dimas etc. remained backward economically, educationally and even politically. The tribal people feel that they are exploited and suppressed by the greater Assamese society who has been the dominant community in Assam. Hence, the emerging educated people and the middle-class elite wanted to organize the community for its all-round development. The tribal became conscious of their distinct identity and this led to the socio-political and cultural movement to assert group identity among the various sub-groups belonging to different language and culture. By this conscious movement, the tribal have gradually started launching their movement to get their cultural, economic and political status raised Tribal league in 1933. On 20 March 1947, under the leadership of the Congress leader late Gopinath Bordoloi demanded complete ruling power for the plains. But the then government of Assam rejected the demand as the scheduled tribe was considered as a part of the greater Assamese community. As a result, in 1950 the constitution of India came into effect, with a provision for an autonomous district for Karbi Anglong and North Kachar again, district councils for the ethnic groups of Mizoram and Meghalaya. Another important reason for demanding self-autonomy was the flow of illegal immigrants from Bangladesh to Assam went on increasing and occupied most of the land of the state and the government was also not interested in protecting the reserved tribal belt and block lands. It is unfortunate to say that the belts and these belts were transferred to non-tribal people by disobeying the land and revenue act passes in 1856. The historic movement for driving out the foreigners from Assam was started under the guidance of "All Assam Students' Union" in 1979 and an accord was signed between the Government of India and AASU. As soon as signing the accord the leaders of AASU formed a political party called Asom Gana Parishad (AGP) and came to the power. Though they paid attention in politics to solve the foreigner problem the government failed completely to solve the illegal immigrants' problems along with other major tribal problems in Assam.
