Medical Research Laboratories,1941      Victorian Studies in Scarlet Richard D. Altick,1970 In the first chapters Mr Altick examines the Victorian delight in murder as a social phenomenon The remainder of the book is constructed around classic murder cases that afford a vivid perspective on the way people lived and died in the Age of Victoria From the beginning of the age homicide was a national entertainment Penny broadsheets hawked in the streets highlighted the most gruesome features of crimes newspapers recounted the most minute details from the discovery of the body to the execution of the criminal Real life murders were quickly adapted for the gaslight melodrama and the bestselling novels of the Newgate and sensation schools Murder scenes and celebrities were the most popular exhibits at Madame Tussaud s waxworks and in the touring peepshows and marionette entertainments Murder in fact was a crimson thread running through the whole fabric of Victorian life By tracing this thread in not too solemn a spirit Mr Altick has written a book that will delight and inform all who are interested in social history as well as that great number who relish true murder stories      Annual Report of the Board
