Studies of Field Systems in the British Isles Alan R. H. Baker, Robin A. Butlin, 1980-03-13 An enormous amount of research into British field systems has been undertaken by historical geographers economic historians and others since H L Gray's classic work on English Field Systems was published Detailed local studies have been legion generalized explanations of the origins and functioning of field systems few but influential in promoting further studies This book both synthesizes and advances our knowledge of field systems in the British Isles An introduction by the editors outlines the sources and methods of studies of field systems There then follow twelve chapters concerned with specific areas within the British Isles In their own conclusion the editors consider the problems and perspectives of field system studies in the context of the British Isles as a whole This chapter is an attempt at generalisation in historical geography generalization in relation to both existing models of British field systems and putative problems which only further research can resolve

Field Systems and Farming Systems in Late Medieval England Bruce M.S. Campbell, 2023-05-31 The later Middle Ages was an overwhelmingly rural world with probably three out of four households reliant upon farming for a living Yet conventional accounts of the period rarely do justice to the variety of ways in which the land was managed and worked The thirteen essays collected in this volume draw upon the abundant documentary evidence of the period to explore that diversity In the process they engage with the issue of classification without which effective generalisation is impossible and offer a series of solutions to that particularly thorny methodological challenge Only through systematic and objective classification is it possible to differentiate between and map different field systems husbandry types and land use categories That in turn makes it possible to consider and evaluate the relative roles of soils and topography institutional structures and commercialised market demand in shaping farm enterprise both during the period of mounting population before the Black Death and the long era of demographic decline that followed it What emerges is an agrarian world more commercialised differentiated and complex than is usually appreciated whose institutional and agronomic contours shaped the course of agricultural development for centuries to come

Routledge Revivals: Medieval Archaeology (2001) Pam J. Crabtree, 2017-07-05 First published in 2001 this is the first reference work to cover the archaeology of medieval Europe No other reference can claim such comprehensive coverage from Ireland to Russia and from Scandinavia to Italy the archaeology of the entirety of medieval Europe is discussed With coverage ranging from the fall of the western Roman empire in the 5th century CE through the end of the high Middle Ages in 1500 CE Medieval Archaeology An Encyclopedia answers the needs of medieval scholars from a variety of backgrounds including archaeologists historians and classicists Featuring over 150 entries by an international team of leading archaeologists this unique reference is soundly based on the most important developments and scholarship in this rapidly growing field    A school atlas of physical geography Alexander Keith Johnston,1873    The Origins of

Early Christian Ireland Harold Mytum,2024-11-18 The cultural developments of Early Christian Ireland have long been recognised and described There have however been few attempts to date to explain why the flowering of culture should happen at the time and in the way that it did First published in 1992 The Origins of Early Christian Ireland now with a new preface by the author explains changes in the period up to AD 800 in Ireland External stimuli most notably from Irish settlers in western Britain acted as catalysts which transformed a relatively moribund Iron Age culture into one of extraordinary vigour All aspects of the culture changed radically and changes in each had knock on effects on others Beliefs were revolutionised by Christianity society was transformed by the church as an institution and the rise of the individual agriculture was expanded by more advanced technology and the entrepreneurial flair of individual decision making craft production became more widespread and offered a vehicle for the display of personal wealth and status Long distance trade and ecclesiastical contacts integrated Ireland with the rest of Europe more effectively than ever before The book has two distinctive features which means that it relates to two forms of academic market each of which can be defined Firstly it deals with a particular culture historical period that of Early Christian Ireland and presents an explanation of its origins and development to AD 800 This appeals to archaeologists and historians of Ireland Britain and indeed Europe Secondly it takes a specific theoretical position and develops it using primarily archaeological but also extensive historical information This is the most detailed application of processualist theory yet undertaken for a historic period in Europe This appeals to archaeologists and anthropologists in Britain and also North America where the processualist approach is the most popular theoretical position    A Legal History of Scotland: The sixteenth century David M. Walker,1988 Deals with the legal history of Scotland from 1488 to 1603 this period includes two major events the institution of the College of Justice and the religious Reformation This book attempts to write a chronological narrative account of the development of the Scottish legal system from early times    Medieval England Edward Miller,John Hatcher,1978    Annual Report of the Commissioner of Education United States. Office of Education,1894    Practical Advanced Biology Tim King,Michael Reiss,Michael Roberts,2001 An accessible resource that can be used alongside the Advanced Biology text or any other core Advanced Biology text as it covers the practical element for AS and A Level Biology    Catalogue of Books Added to the Radcliffe Library, Oxford University Museum ... ,1875    Urban Patronage and Social Authority Lindsay J. Proudfoot,1995 While scholars traditionally have considered land to be one of the great issues in Irish history towns by contrast have frequently been regarded as the creation of intrusive colonial elites and therefore not fully representative of Irish culture and identity Even today despite the recent reinvigoration of Irish historical writing Irish urban history remains largely neglected by scholars Very few works have explored the causes and consequences of the widespread urban improvement that occurred throughout the country during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Here for the first time the traditional historical concerns for landownership and agrarian society are combined with an analysis of the social and demographic structure and functional role of provincial Irish towns. Against the backdrop of the broad economic, social and political events affecting all of Ireland Lindsay Proudfoot examines the role played by successive dukes of Devonshire, members of one of the wealthiest English aristocratic families with holdings in Ireland, in promoting the modernization and redevelopment of the five Irish towns they owned in the period between 1794 and 1891. Proudfoot's work challenges many previously held assumptions about the character of the landowning minority and its role in Ireland's economic, social and political history. It is demonstrated that, contrary to what some historians have asserted, landlords were not the supreme arbiters of local life in Ireland and that the landlord's choice of action was limited by economic circumstance and local social attitudes and political opinions. Proudfoot also shows that the relationship between successive dukes and their tenants was characterized by a surprising degree of tacit collaboration as each party sought to profit from the maintenance of what were essentially mutually beneficial tenurial ties. The eventual weakening of these ties owed far more to national events than to any inherent contradictions in the landlord-tenant relationship itself. Urban Patronage opens up new avenues of approach to the study of urban estates in Ireland and, in so doing, tests and challenges many accepted notions about the actions and motivations of Irish landlords. Because it adds significantly to our understanding of the role and influence of the landed aristocracy in the urban communities of eighteenth and nineteenth century Ireland, it will be of particular interest to scholars and advanced students specializing in Irish history, cultural studies or historical geography. Lindsay Proudfoot is reader in geography at Queen's University Belfast where he has taught since 1977. He has published extensively in the field of Irish historical geography and is the coeditor of An Historical Geography of Ireland (1993).

The Saturday Review of Politics, Literature, Science and Art, 1870    Current Research in Library & Information Science, 1985    The Medieval English Economy, 1150-1500 J. L. Bolton, 1980 The centuries after the Norman Conquest saw the consolidation of a pattern of settlement which lasted in the main until the Industrial Revolution. The study of England's medieval foundations is therefore fundamental but it is a complex subject with a considerable literature. This book is an attempt to give a clear introduction to the economic history of the period which will equip the reader to tackle the numerous more specialist studies.    English Mechanic and Mirror of Science and Art, 1893    Sandlands Tom Williamson, 2005 This book explains how this distinctive landscape, the Sandlings or to use an older name, the Sandlands, evolved over centuries through the interaction of people and nature. Tom Williamson examines the origins and development of both the wildlife habitats and the wider landscape of fields, farms, towns and settlements. The landscape was firmly shaped by the hand of man. Yet at the same time the character of local communities has itself been moulded by nature and, in particular, by the poor acid soils and the ever changing form of the coast. Jacket A catalogue of modern works on science and technology. 2nd, 4th, 5th, 7th, 8th, 10th-14th,
