Studying Boundary Conflicts: A Theoretical Framework. By Sven Tägt, Kristian Gerner, Göran Henrikson, Rune Johansson, Ingemar Oldberg and Kim Salomon. (Lund, Sweden: Eoselte Studium, 1977. Pp. 215. Price not listed.)

At first glance a study of boundary conflicts might portend a rather dry, hyperfactual approach to the subject. Happily, such expectations are not borne out in this book, for its treatment of boundary conflicts is both analytical and abstract. This volume is the first in a series of studies of boundary conflicts in Europe during the period between the First and Second World Wars. As the first book in this series, its primary orientation is toward epistemology and theory.

The authors define the goals of their project as expanding "knowledge of the problems of boundary conflicts and offering explanations for the courses of action pursued by individuals and groups in such conflicts" (p. 12). As a research site for pursuing these goals, the authors choose five boundary conflicts taking place in the critical pre-Second World War era. The reasons for choosing this particular area and time have to do not only with the availability of data, but more importantly with the prominence of boundaries in European politics during this period. Following the end of the First World War many European boundaries were redrawn with the goal of making nations as homogeneous as possible. As the authors note, the ethnically mixed character of populations in several areas made it impossible to achieve this goal. Subsequently, tensions did arise in these areas, tensions which were subject to manipulation and escalation by local and national political leaders. Against this background the authors are intent upon understanding the nature of these local conflicts and also of evaluating the extent to which they contributed to the occurrence of the Second World War.

To direct their investigation, the authors establish a theoretical framework, the most important elements of which are their epistemological assumptions, conception of conflict and the factors they hypothesize will explain the emergence and developments of the conflicts. The epistemological position adopted by the authors is that human beings act in accordance with perceived reality. Conflict emerges when actors perceive that their goals are incompatible with other actors with whom they must interact. However, in explaining the main variables in the theoretical framework the authors clearly recognize that goal-directed behavior, even though affected by perceptions, must also be shaped and constrained by the administrative, socioeconomic and cultural systems in which the actors are located.

While it is appropriate to begin a research report—particularly one which will cover several volumes—with an explanation of the project's theoretical position, at this point it would also have been helpful for the authors to have been more generous with a substantive account of the various boundary conflicts so that the theoretical arguments could be tied more systematically to the data. There is also another, larger aspect of the research which needs to be addressed. Throughout the world, and across time, how frequently do boundary disputes occur? How frequently do they result in violence? How do the cases considered in the present study relate to other boundary conflicts? Without a consideration of questions such as these, the case studies will ultimately stand in isolation, and one may wonder then if five isolated case studies are really worth the impressive theoretical structure contained in this book.

Poverty: Wealth of Mankind. By Albert Tévoédjré. (New York and London: Pergamon Press, 1979. Pp. iv + 162. $22.00, cloth; $11.00, paper.)

One hundred years ago, Froudhon proposed resolving the rich-poor dichotomy through removal of the poverty component of the relationship. Today the reverse surgical operation is being advocated by the Deputy Director-General of the ILO and Director of the International Institute of Social Studies, Albert Tévoédjré, a citizen of Benin who is also a professor of political science at the Sorbonne, argues that the solution to the major issues of the end of this century will depend on a massive return to socioeconomic and political systems in which individuals' poverty provides the basis for collective wealth and well-being, to be achieved through the social control of needs.
