Adult Paperback Book Guide ,1994 The Moving Finger E. Phillips Oppenheim, 2020-12-28 Bertrand Saton leaned against the stone coping of the bridge and looked downwards as though watching the seagulls circling round and round waiting for their usual feast of scraps The gulls however were only his excuse He stood there looking hard at the gray muddy water beneath trying to make up his mind to this final and inevitable act of despair He had walked the last hundred yards almost eagerly He had told himself that he was absolutely and entirely prepared for death Yet the first sight of that gray cold looking river had chilled him He felt a new and unaccountable reluctance to quit the world which certainly seemed to have made up its mind that it had no need of him His thoughts rushed backwards Swim out to sea on a sunny day he repeated to himself slowly Yes but this It was a different thing this The longer he looked below the more he shrank from such a death He stood upright with a little shiver and began it was not for the first time that day a searching investigation into the contents of his pocket The result was uninspiring There was not an article there which would have fetched the price of a dose of poison Then his fingers strayed into a breast pocket which he seldom used and brought out a letter unopened all grimy and showing signs of having been there for some considerable time He held it between his fingers doubtful at first from where it had come Then suddenly he remembered He remembered the runaway horses in the Bois and the strange looking old woman who had sat in the carriage with grim drawn lips and pallid face He remembered the dash into the roadway the brief maddening race by the side of the horses his clutch at the reins the sense of being dragged along the dusty road It was perhaps the one physically courageous action of his life The horses were stopped and the woman's life was saved He looked at the letter in his hand Why not he asked himself softly He hesitated and glanced downward once more toward the river The sight seemed to decide him He turned his weary footsteps again westward Walking with visible effort and resting whenever he had a chance he reached at last the Oxford Street end of Bond Street Holding the letter in his hand he made his way slowly and more painfully than ever down the right hand side People stared at him a little curiously He was a strange figure passing through the crowds of well dressed sauntering men and women He was unnaturally thin the pallor of his cheeks and the gleam in his eyes spoke of starvation His clothes had been well cut but they were almost in rags His cap had cost him a few pence at a second hand store He made his way toward his destination looking neither to the right nor to the left The days had gone when he found it interesting to study the faces of the passers by looking out always for adventures amusing himself with shrewd speculations as to the character and occupation of those who seemed worthy of notice This was his last quest now the quest of life or death He stopped in front of a certain number and comparing it with the tattered envelope which he held in his hand finally entered The lift boy who was lounging in the little hall looked at him in surprise I want to find Madame Helga the young man said shortly This is number 38 isn't it The boy looked at him doubtfully and led the way to the lift Third floor he said I'll take you up

The Princeton Anthology of Writing John McPhee, Carol Rigolot, 2001-08-05 In 1957 long before colleges awarded degrees in creative nonfiction and back when newspaper writing's reputation was tainted by the fish it wrapped Princeton began honoring talented literary journalists Since then fifty nine of the finest most dedicated and most decorated nonfiction writers have held the Ferris and McGraw professorships This monumental volume harbors their favorite and often most influential works Each contribution is rewarding reading and collectively the selections validate journalism's ascent into the esteem of the academy and the reading public Necessarily eclectic and delightfully idiosyncratic the fifty nine pieces are long and short political and personal comic and deadly serious Students will be provoked by William

Greider's pointed critique of the democracy industry eerily entertained by Leslie Cockburn's fraternization with the Cali cartel inspired by David K Shipler's thoughts on race unsettled by Haynes Johnson's account of Bay of Pigs survivors and moved by Lucinda Frank's essay on a mother fighting to save a child born with birth defects Many of the essays are finely crafted portraits Charlotte Grimes's biography of her grandmother Blair Clark's obituary for Robert Lowell and Jane Kramer's affecting story of a woman hero of the French Resistance Other contributions to savor include Harrison Salisbury on the siege of Leningrad Landon Jones on the 1950s Christopher Wren on Soviet mountaineering James Gleick on technology Gloria Emerson on Vietnam Gina Kolata on Fermat's last theorem and Roger Mudd on the media Whether approached chronologically thematically randomly or as the editors order them more intuitively each suggests a perfect evening reading Designed for students as well as general readers The Princeton Anthology of Writing splendidly attests to the elegance eloquence and endurance of fine nonfiction
