Roman Law and Economics Giuseppe Dari-Mattiacci, Dennis P. Kehoe, 2020-05-26 Ancient Rome is the only society in the history of the western world whose legal profession evolved autonomously distinct and separate from institutions of political and religious power Roman legal thought has left behind an enduring legacy and exerted enormous influence on the shaping of modern legal frameworks and systems but its own genesis and context pose their own explanatory problems The economic analysis of Roman law has enormous untapped potential in this regard by exploring the intersecting perspectives of legal history economic history and the economic analysis of law the two volumes of Roman Law and Economics are able to offer a uniquely interdisciplinary examination of the origins of Roman legal institutions their functions and their evolution over a period of more than 1000 years in response to changes in the underlying economic activities that those institutions regulated Volume II covers the concepts of exchange ownership and disputes analysing the detailed workings of credit property and slavery among others while Volume I explores Roman legal institutions and organizations in detail from the constitution of the Republic to the management of business in the Empire Throughout each volume contributions from specialists in legal and economic history law and legal theory are underpinned by rigorous analysis drawing on modern empirical and theoretical techniques and methodologies borrowed from economics In demonstrating how these can be fruitfully applied to the study of ancient societies with due deference to the historical context Roman Law and Economics opens up a host of new avenues of research for scholars and students in each of these fields and in the social sciences more broadly offering new ways in which different modes of enquiry can connect with and inform each other

Paul Arthur provides an important new synthesis of the archaeology and history of the Italian city of Naples from the late Roman to the early Medieval period Arthur considers the standard criteria for the definition of the Roman and the Medieval town in order to demonstrate how Naples maintained the characteristics of an urban settlement through the so called Dark Ages and how this put it in a position to participate in the regeneration of Mediterranean trade at the beginning of the Medieval period He looks at the evidence for public and private contributions to the changing physical environment of Naples including the harbour facilities defences street plans public buildings the water supply private houses and gardens and cemeteries He considers the role of the Christian Church in the ongoing development of the city looking at the organization and layout of churches monasteries and convents and their relationship to earlier pagan buildings He examines evidence for rural settlement agricultural activity and urban manufacturing in the low years of the post Roman period and Naples strategic position vis vis important maritime trade routes at the beginning of the Medieval period and as a major stopover point for pilgrims to and from the holy land Arthur argues that geographical conditions and traditional links with the Near East guaranteed Naples a crucial level of cultural development through the 2nd half of the 1st millennium AD and facilitated the rise of Naples to the position of a major Mediterranean power a position that it was to retain up until the unification of Italy
