The Battle Of The Bismarck Sea:

The Battle of the Bismarck Sea, March 1943 Gregory Phillip Gilbert,2013 This year marks the 70th anniversary of the Allied attack and destruction of the Japanese forces escorting the Lae Resupply Convoy on 3 March 1943 The Allied victory was so absolute that eight transport ships and four escorting destroyers were sunk for the loss of only six Allied aircraft Fifteen minutes that s all it took to strike a decisive blow in the Pacific War however to many Australians the Battle of the Bismarck Sea is just one of the many battles fought over the course of the World War II While the critical stage of the fighting occurred during a 15 minute window on that early March morning it was the detailed strategic and operational planning that allowed the Allied forces to exploit their increased air superiority over the Japanese and destroy their campaign plans in the Pacific The attack on the convoy was a true show of strength from the Allies not only in terms of control of the air but also in the battle of minds breaking the spirit of the Japanese forces by exposing their strategic weaknesses and effectively ending their threat in the South West Pacific region The Battle of the Bismarck Sea details and analyses the planning and preparation of both Allied and Japanese forces leading up to the battle description of the battle itself and discussion of the aftermath including stunning photographs taken during the fighting by renowned wartime photographer Damien Parer The Air Power Development Centre is pleased to present this concise examination of the Battle of the Bismarck Sea in this year of the 70th anniversary of the battle Back cover The Battle of the Bismarck Sea Michael

Veitch,2021-07-28 Readers look for and admire good writers and great writing They will find it in spades in The Battle of the Bismarck Sea The Canberra Times In the thick of World War II during the first week of March 1943 Japan made a final desperate lunge for control of the South West Pacific In the ensuing Battle of the Bismarck Sea a force of land based Australian and American planes attacked a massive convoy of Japanese warships The odds were against them But a devastating victory was won and Japan s hopes of regaining the initiative in New Guinea destroyed More importantly for Australians the victory decisively removed any possibility that Australia might be invaded by Japanese forces It was for us one of the most significant times in our history a week when our future was profoundly in the balance Bestselling author Michael Veitch tells the riveting story of this crucial moment in history how the bravery of young men and experienced fighters renegades and rule followers overcame some of the darkest days of World War II

B-25 Mitchell vs Japanese Destroyer Mark Lardas,2021-12-23 The Battle of the Bismarck Sea was one of the most decisive naval battles of World War II and this highly illustrated study details the three day fight which shaped the outcome of the war

The Battle of the Bismarck Sea Lex McAulay,2008 This is the first complete account of the destruction of the crucial Japanese reinforcement convoy to Lae New Guinea March 2 4 1943 Described from the viewpoint of the Japanese on the ships and the attacking U S and Australian flight crews the action has an immediacy that is dramatic and exhilarating was a watershed in the history of military aviation. On the heels of victory in the Solomon Islands Island chain the battle marked the destruction of a major Japanese convoy reinforcing New Guinea by air power alone. The Allied forces had completely turned the tide against the Japanese in the Pacific theater at a time when the Japanese still possessed the capability to resist. The Japanese planned a thorough and comprehensively joint operation in order to ensure the safe arrival of the convoy. Especially critical to the operation were their combined army and navy air forces. The Japanese fully understood the lessons of air power and intended to contest allied air superiority. The Japanese however had poor command and control, inferior technology and tactics and lacked the flexibility to take full advantage of airpower. The Battle of the Bismarck Sea Jacob J. Holmgren, Air University (U.S.). Air Command and Staff College, 2008. The Battle of the Bismarck Sea was a watershed in the history of military aviation. On the heels of victory in the Solomon Islands Island chain the battle marked the destruction of a major Japanese convoy reinforcing New Guinea by air power alone. The Allied forces had completely turned the tide against the Japanese in the Pacific theater at a time when the Japanese still possessed the capability to resist. The Japanese planned a thorough and comprehensively joint operation in order to ensure the safe arrival of the convoy. Especially critical to the operation were their combined army and navy air forces. The Japanese fully understood the lessons of air power and intended to contest allied air superiority. The Japanese however had poor command and control, inferior technology and tactics and lacked the flexibility to take full advantage of airpower. The Allies executed a brilliant combined operation featuring the air forces of the Royal Australian Air Force. Allied innovation in the realm of tactics planning and execution would confound all Japanese efforts to defend the convoy. Furthermore extensive Allied training and rehearsal combined with decisive intelligence intercepts that provided the Japanese movement schedule would result in the decimation of the Japanese convoy. The battle is an excellent example of the inherent flexibility of airpower but also of the importance of tactical innovation, command and control and technology. While both belligerents were well versed in the application of air power the Allies had learned the critical lessons and applied them more effectively during the Battle of the Bismarck Sea.
