Growth Trends in European Forests Heinrich Spiecker, Kari Mielikäinen, Michael Köhl, Jens P. Skovsgaard, 2012-12-06
The European Forest Institute EFI has five Research and Development priority areas: forest sustainability, forestry and possible climate change, structural changes in markets for forest products and services, policy analysis and forest sector information services and research methodology. In the area of forest sustainability, our most important activity has been the project 'Growth trends of European forests', the results of which are presented in this book. The project was started in August 1993 under the leadership of Prof. Dr. Heinrich Spiecker from the University of Freiburg, Germany, and it is one of the first EFI research projects after its establishment in 1993. The main purpose of the project was to analyse whether site productivity has changed in European forests during the last decades. While several forest growth studies have been published at local, regional and national levels, this project has aimed at stimulating a joint effort in identifying and quantifying possible growth trends and their spatial and temporal extent at the European level. Debate on forest decline and possible climate change, as well as considerations related to the long-term supply of wood, underline the importance of this project both from environmental and industrial points of view. Knowledge on possible changes in growth trends is vital for the sustainable management of forest ecosystems.

Agricultural Transformation and Land Use in Central and Eastern Europe Stephan J. Goetz, Tanja Jaksch, 2020-07-26
This title was first published in 2001. By presenting research from a multidisciplinary perspective, this book will serve as an important reference tool for researchers and others interested in the land use issues of Central and Eastern Europe, as well as agribusiness leaders seeking potential trading relations with and within these European countries.

Frost Survival of Plants Akira Sakai, Walter Larcher, 2012-12-06
Low temperature, together with drought and salt stress, is one of the most important environmental constraints limiting the productivity and the distribution of plants on the Earth. Winter survival, in particular, is a highly complex phenomenon with regards to both stress factors and stress responses. The danger from winter cold is the result not only of its primary effect, i.e. the formation of ice in plant tissues, but also of additional threats presented by the freezing of water in and on the ground and by the load and duration of the snow cover. In recent years, a number of books and reviews on the subject of chilling and frost resistance in plants have appeared; all of these publications, however, concentrate principally on the mechanisms of injury and resistance to freezing at the cellular or molecular level. We are convinced that analysis of the ultrastructural and biochemical alterations in the cell, and particularly in the plasma membrane during freezing, is the key to understanding the limits of frost resistance and the mechanisms of cold acclimation. This is undoubtedly the immediate task facing those of us engaged in resistance research. It is nevertheless our opinion that, in addition to understanding the basic physiological events, we should be careful not to overlook the importance of the comparative aspects of the freezing processes, the components of stress avoidance and tolerance, and the specific levels of resistance.
